place where it was wrytē, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chāberlaynes (which kepte þe thresholde) sought to laie hondes on kyng Ahasuerus. And the kyng sayde: What worshippe and good haue we done to Mardocheus therfore? Then sayde the kynges seruauntes that mynystred vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kyng sayde: Who is in þe court? (for Aman was gone in to þe court without before þe kynges house, þe he might speake vnto þe kyng to hange Mardocheus on þe tre, þe he had prepared for him.) And the kynges seruauntes saide vnto him: Beholde, Amā stōdeth in the court. The kyng sayde: Let him come in. And whā Amā came in, þe kyng saide vnto him: What shal be done vnto þe mā, whom the kyng wolde fayne brynge vnto worshippe? But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom shulde the kyng els be glad to brynge vnto worshippe, but me? And Aman sayde vnto the kyng: Let the man vnto whom the kyng wolde be glad to do worshippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araid with the royall garments which the kyng vseth to weere: and the horse that the kyng rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be set vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horse be delyuered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horse thorow the strete of the cite, and cause it to be proclaimed before him: Thus shal it be done to euery man, whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure.

The kyng sayde: Make haist, and take (as thou hast saide) the raymēt and the horse, and do euen so with Mardocheus þe Iewe that sitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge fayle of all that thou hast spoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horse, and arayed him, and broughte him on horsbacke thorow the strete of the cite, and proclaimed before him: Euen thus shall it be done vnto euery man whom the kyng is disposed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mournynge with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, euery thyng that had happened him. Then sayde his wise men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: Yf it be Mardocheus of the sede of the Iewes, before who thou hast begonne to fall, thou canst do nothyng vnto him, but shalt fall before him. Whyle they were yet talkyng with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the bancket that Hester had prepared.

The vij. Chapter.

AND whan the kynge and Aman came to the bancket that quene Hester had prepared, the kynge sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye whan he had dröken wyne: What is thy peticion quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what requyrest thou? Yee axe euen halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester & quene answered and sayde: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte (O kynge) and yf it please the kynge, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my petitions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwemen, then wolde I holde my tonge, so shulde not the enemye be so hye to the kynges harme. The kynge Ahasuerus spake & saide vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he & darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

As for Amā, he was exceedingly afraied before & kynge & & quene. And the kynge arose frō the bancket & frō & wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe & there was a mischaunce prepared for him of the kynge already.

And whan the kynge came agayne out of the palace garden in to & parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then saide the kinge: wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that worde wente out of the kynges mouth, they couered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kynge, sayde: Beholde, there stondest a galowe in Amā's house fiftie cubytes hye, which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for & kinge. The kynge sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath styled.

The viij. Chapter.

THE same daye dyd kynge Ahasuerus geue the house of Aman the Iewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before & kinge: for Hester tolde how that he belöged vnto her. And the kynge put of his fygner ryng, which he had taken from Aman, & gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kynge, and fell downe at his fete, & besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against & Iewes. And the kynge helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kynge, and sayde: Yf it please the kynge, and yf I haue föude grace in his sight, & yf it be cōuenyent for the kinge, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wryttē, & the letters of the deuyce of Amā the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroye & Iewes in all & kynges lödes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people? and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde & kynge Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Iewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, & him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed häde vpon & Iewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Iewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with & kynges ryng (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in & kynges name, and sealed with the kynges ryng, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges scribes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Sivan, on the thre & twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus cōmaunded) vnto the Iewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundred and seuen and twentye londes, vnto euery one acordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Iewes acordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kynge Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the

kyng gaunted the Iewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and wemen, and to spoyle their good vpon one daye in all the londes of kyng Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a comaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that y Iewes shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haist with all speede, accordinge to the kynges worde: and the comaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kyng in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beyng arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and y cite of Susan reioysed t was glad: but vnto the Iewes there was come light and gladnesse, t ioye t worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and comaundemēt reached, there was ioye t myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Iewes: in so moch that many of the people in the londe became of the Iewes beleue, for the feare of the Iewes came vpon them.

The ix. Chapter.

A IN the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrteenth daye, which the kynges worde and comaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon y same daie y the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Iewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen y the Iewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Iewes together in their cities within all y londes of kyng Ahasuerus, to laye honde on soch as wolde do thē euell, t no man coulde withstonde them: for y feare of thē was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kinge promoted the Iewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpō thē. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, t the reporte of him was noised in all lōdes, how he increased t grewe.

Thus the Iewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, t dyd after their wyll vnto soch as were their aduersaries. And at y castell of Susan slewe the Iewes and destroyed fyue hūdreth men: t slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmastha, Arissai, Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman y sonne of Amadathi y enemye of the Iewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kyng certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kyng sayde vnto quene Hester: The Iewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hūdreth men at y castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Amā: What shal they do in the other londes of y kyng? What is thy petition, that it maye be geuen the? t what requiest thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kyng, let him suffre the Iewes tomorow also to do accordinge vnto this dayes comaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpō y tre. And the kyng charged to do so, and the comaundement was deuysed at Susan, t Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Iewes gathered thē selues together at Susan, vpon the fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hādes.

C As for the other Iewes in the kynges lōdes, they came together, t stode for their lyues, t gatt rest frō their enemies: and slewe of their enemies fyue and seentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtēth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourteenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Iewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrteenth daye and on the fourteenth, and on the fyfteenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge t gladnes. Therefore the Iewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalled townes, ordeyned y fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the wrytinges vnto all the Iewes y were in all y londes of kyng Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourteenth and fyfteenth daie of the

D moneth Adar, as the daies wherin f Iewes came to rest from their enemies, t as a moneth wherin their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as dayes of wealth and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another, t to distribute vnto the poore.

And the Iewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all f Iewes enemye, had deuysed to destroye all the Iewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Iewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all f wordes of this wrytinge: and what they the selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

E And the Iewes set it vp, and toke it vpon them and their sede, and vpon all such as ioyned themselues vnto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were wryttē and appoynted, how f these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amōge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be ouerslipte amonge the Iewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Iewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Iewes in the hundreth and seuen and twentye londes of f empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynge as Mardocheus the Iewe and Hester the quene had ordeined cōcernynge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had cōfirmed the actes of the * fastinges and of hir cōplainte. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a boke.

The r. Chapter.

A ND the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute A vpon the londe, and vpon the Iles of the See. As for all f worke of his power and auctoryte, and f greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media t Persia, For Mardocheus the Iewe was the seconde nexte vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge f Iewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one f seketh the welth of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

IN the lōde of Hus^a there was a man called Iob: an innocent and vertuous man, soch one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had^b vij. sonnes, and iij. daughters. His substaunce was vij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so y^c he was one of the most principall men amōge all them of the east countre. His sonnes now wente on euery man, and made banquettes: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate & drinke with them. So when they had passed ouer the tyme of their banquettinge rounde aboute, Iob sent for them, and clensed them agayne, stode vp early, and offred for euery one a brētofferinge. For Iob thought thus: peradventure my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Iob euery daye.

Now vpon a tyme, when the seruauentes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lōde,^a and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruaunt Iob, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sathan answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE: Doth Iob feare God for naught? hast thou not persued him, his house, and all his substaunce on euery syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his hondes? Is not his possession encreaced in the londe? But laye thyne honde vpō him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse thee to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon him selfe se that thou laye not thine honde. Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

Now vpon a certayne daye when his sonnes C

and daughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, there came a messaunger vnto Iob, and sayde: Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in violēty, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruantes with the swearde, and I only ranne my waye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakynge, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed a brett vp all the shepe and seruantes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane season whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruantes with the swearde: and I only am gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was speakinge, there came yet another, and sayde: Thy sonnes and daughters were eatinge and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, and sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iiij. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gotten awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Iob stode vp, and rente his clothes shaued his heade, fell downe vpon the groude, worshipped, and sayde: "Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I turne thither agayne. ^bThe LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LORDE hath done his pleasure) now ^cblessed be thy name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Iob not offende, ner murmured foolishly agaynst God.

The ij. Chapter.

IT happened also apon a tyme, "that when the seruantes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: "I haue gone aboute the lode, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan: Hast thou not considered my seruant Iob, how that he is an innocent and vertuous man such one as feareth God, and eschueueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to punysh him: yet is it in wayne, for he contynueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: Skyne for skyne? yee a man will geue all that euer he hath, for his life. But laye thine honde vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LORDE, and smote Iob with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote vnto his crowne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the ashes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: "Dost thou yet cōtinue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, and dye. But Iob sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue receaued prosperite at the honde of God, wherfore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? ^eIn all these thinges, dyd not Iob synne with his lippes.

Now when Iobs frendes herde of all that trouble, that happened vnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naamathite.

For they were agreed together to come, to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and sprynckled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the grounde, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER this opened Iob his mouth, and cursed his daye, and sayde: ^alost be that daye, wherin I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a manchild conceived. The same daye be turned to darknesse, and not regarded of God from aboue, nether be shyned vpon with light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dymme cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorowe. Let the darckstorne ouercome y^e night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the yeaere, ner counted in the monethes. Despyed be that night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, geue it their curse also, euen those that be ready to rayse vp Leuiathan. Let the starres be dymme thorow darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it se none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre mornynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes fro myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in y^e byrth? ^aWhy dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of my mothers wōbe? Why set they me vpō y^rir knees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynges ād lordes of y^e earth, which buylde them selues speciall places: As the prynces that haue greate substaunce of golde, & their houses full of syluer. O that I vtterly had no beyng, or were as a thīge borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked cease from their tyranny, there such as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in preson, so that they heare nomore the voyce of the oppressoure: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre frō his master.

C Wherefore is the light geuen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue heuy hertes? (Which longe for death, and it commeth not: for yf they might fynde their graue, they wolde be maruelous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepeth backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and my roariniges fall out like a water floude. For the thyng that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thyng that I was afraied of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? Had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now commeth soch mysery vpon me.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphas of Theman and sayde vnto him: Yf we begynne to comon with the, peraduenture thou wilt be mys-content, but who can witholde himself from speakynge? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weery hondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refreshed the weake knees. But now that the plage is come vpon the, thou shrēkest awaye: now that it hath touched thyself, thou art faint harted. ^aWhere is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy pacience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer peryshed, beyng an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? ^cAs for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself) and sowe myschefe, they reape y^e same. For whē God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed thorow the blast of his wrath. The roarinige of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyonesse, & y^e teth off y^e lyōs whelpes are brokē. The greate lyon perysheth, because he cā get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scatred abrode.

B There is spoken vnto me a thyng in counsell, which hath geuen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, ^dwhen men are fallen a slepe. Soch feare and drede came vpō me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp.

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? ^eMaye there eny man be iudged to be clene, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vn faythfulnesse amonge his owne seruantes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels.

How moch more thē shal they (that dwell in houses of claye, whose foundation is but earth) be moth eaten? They shalbe destroyed from the mornynge vnto the euenynge: yee they shall perish, or euer they be awarre: and be taken awaye so clene, that none of thē shall remayne, but be deed, or euer they be awarre off it.

ignorant. "I haue sene my self, when the foolish was depe roted, that his bewty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the dore, and no mā to delyuer them: "that his haruest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thurstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of ꝑ groude: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, like as the byrde for to fle.

B But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, and marueles without nōbre: Which geueth rayne vpō the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuyces of the sotyll, "so that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth ꝑ wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouertroweth the counsell of the wicked: "In so moch that they runne in to darknesse by fayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the night.

And so he delyuereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hōde of the cruell: that the poore maye haue hope, and that the mouth of the oppressoure maye be stopped.

C Beholde, "happie is the man, whom God punysheth: therefore, despyse not thou ꝑ chastenynge of the Allmyghty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medecyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He delyuereth the out of sixe troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of hunger he saueth ꝑ from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perlous tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nede to feare. "In destrucion and derth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afrayed for the bestes of the earth: But the castels in the londe shal be confederate with the, and the bestes of the felde shall geue the peace:

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substaunce, and be nomore punyshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall encrease, and that thy posterite shalbe as the grasse vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as ꝑ corne sheeues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Therefore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thyself.

The vi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O that my misery weere weyed, and my punyshment layed in the balauces: for then shulde it be heuyer, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so sorowfull.

For the allmyghty hath shott at me with his arowes, whose indignacion hath droncke vp my sprete, and ꝑ terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse roare when he hath grasse? "Or crieth the ox, whē he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thyng be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What taist hath ꝑ whyte within the yoke an egg? The thinges that some tyme I might not awaye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O ꝑ God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, and hew me downe. Thē shulde I haue some cōforte: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst ꝑ wordes of the holy one.

What power haue I to endure? Or what is myne ende, that my soule might be paciēt? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone from me, like as yf one withdrew a good dede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? Myne owne brethren passe ouer by me as the water-broke, that hastily runneth thorow ꝑ valleys. "But they that feare the horefrost, the snowe shal fall vpon them.

When their tyme cometh, they shalbe destroyed and perishe: and when they be set on fyre, they shalbe remoued out of their place, for the pathes y^e they go in, are coked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perish. Considre the pathes off Theman, & the wayes off Saba, wherin they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cōfidence in them: For whē they came to opteyne the thynges that they looked for, they were brought to confucion.

C Euē so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye se my mysery, ye are afraied. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substaunce? To delyuer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shewe me wherin.

Wherefore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reprove them? Sauynge only that ye are sotyll to check mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, ad go aboute to ouerthrowe youre owne frende. Wherefore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne in to youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and considre myne vngyltinesse: whether there be eny vnrightuousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The viij. Chapter.

A IS not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: "O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be darcke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthinesse and dust: my skyne is withered, and cromptled together: my dayes passe ouer more spedely, thē a weeuier can weeu out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. O remembre, that my life is but a wynde, ad that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures therof, yee and that none other mans eye shall se me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught. like as a cloude is cōsumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, nether shall his place knowe him eny more.

Therefore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in y^e bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whalfysh, that thou kepest me so in preson? When I thynke: my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some refresshing by talkynge with myself vpon my couche: Thē troublest thou me with dreames, ad makest me so afraied throw visions, that my soule wyssheth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be deed.

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne. What is man, that thou hast him in soch reputacion, and settest so moch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodely doest thou trye him.

Why goest thou not fro me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swallow downe my spetle? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto y^e, O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heuy a burden vnto my self? Why doest thou not forgeue me my synne? Wherefore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou sekest me tomorow in the mornynge, I shalbe gone.

The viij. Chapter.

A THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thinges? how longe shal thy mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerthe the thinge that is laulful? Or, doth the Allmightie destroye the thyng that is right? Whē thy sonnes synned agaynst him, dyd not he punysh thē for their wickednesse? Yff thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, and make thine humble prayer to y^e Allmightie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediaty, & geue the the bewtie of rightuousnesse agayne? In so moch, that where i so euer thou haddest litle afore, thou shuldest now haue greate abudaunce. are but of yesterdays, and conside not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. "They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the same.

B Maye a resshe be grene without moystnesse? maye the grasse growe without water? No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before eny other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spyders webbe.

He leeneth him vpō his house, but he shal not stonde: he holdeth him fast by it, yet shal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth florish, and men thynke that it maye abyde the Sonneshyne: it shuteth forth the braunches in his garden, it taketh many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones. But yf it be taken out off his place, euery man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not. Lo, thus is it with him, that reioyseth in his owne doinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast away a vertuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngodly. Thy mouth shall he fyll with laughynge, and thy lyppes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, and y dwellices of y vngodly shal come to naught.

The ix. Chapter.

A IOB answered, and sayde: "As for y I knowe it is so of a treuth, y a man compared vnto God, can not be iustified. Yf he wil argue with him, he shall not be able to answere him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He translateth the mountaynes, or euer they be awarre, and ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake withall. He commaundeth the Sōne, and it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himself alone spredeth out y heauens, and goeth vpon the wawes of the see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the vij. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greate thinges, such as are vnsearchable, yee and wonders without nombre.

B Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpō him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not perceaue it. Yf he be haisty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne? Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou? "He is God, whose wrath no man maye withstōde: but the proudest of all must stoupe vnder him. How shulde I then answere him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yee though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely submytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, y he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my sprete be in rest, but fylleth me with bytternesse.

C Yf men will speake of strength, he is the strōgest of all: yf mē will speake of righteousness, who darre be my recorde? yf I will iustifie my self, myne owne mouth shall cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfecte man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: For that I shulde be an innocent, my cōscience knoweth it not, yee I my self am weery off my life.

This one thīge wil I saye: "He destroyeth both the righteous and vngodly. And though he slaye sodenly with the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punyshment of the innocent. As for the worlde, he geueth it ouer in to the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be, wherof all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

D "My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that haisteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complainynge to chaunge my countenance, and to cōforte my self: then am I afayed of all my workes, for I knowe, thou faouorest not an euell doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snowe water, and made myne hondes neuer so clene, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in y myre, and myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. For he y I must geue answere vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as

I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to reprove both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me nomore afrayed of him, and then shal I answere him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearfulnesse, I can make no answere: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

The x. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil speake out of the very heuynesse off my soule, and will saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherfore thou iudget me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to cast me of (beinge a worke of thy hondes) and to manteyne the counsell of the vngodly? Hast thou fleszshy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man loketh? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yeares as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisition for my wickednesse, and searchest out my synne? where as (notwithstondinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to deluyer me out of thine honde. "Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde aboute, wilt thou then destroye me sodely? O remembre (I beseke the) how that thou madest me of the mould of the earth, and shalt brynge me to earth agayne.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylck: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with skynne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my sprete.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest the all. Wherfore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not censed me fro myne offence? Yf I do wickedly, wo is me therefore: Yf I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and se myne owne misery.

Thou huntest me out (beynge in heuynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bringest fresh witnesses agaynst me, thy wrath increasest thou vpon me, very many are the places that I am in. Wherfore hast thou brought me^a out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. Yf they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ende? O holde the fro me, let me alone, that I maye ease myself a litle: afore I go thither, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of darcknesse & shadowe of death: yee in to that darck cloudy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no ordre, but terrible feare as in the darcknesse.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered? Shulde he that babbleth moch, be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am clene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how manyfolde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekyng? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allmightie? He is hyer the heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper the hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth y bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust the together, who darre check him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then consider it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld asses foale. Yf thou haddest now a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes toward him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, the shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thyinke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mornynge. Then mightest thou haue comfort, in the hope that thou hast: ⁊ slepe quietly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and no mā to make the afraied, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The xij. Chapter.

A SO Iob answered, and sayde: Then (noute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstōdinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpō God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neyghboure: the godly ⁊ innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despysed in ⁊ hertes of the rich, ⁊ is set for them to stomble vpon.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, ⁊ they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richly with his honde.

B Axe the catell, ⁊ they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shall tell ⁊: Speake to the earth, and it shall shewe the: Or to the fyshes of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that ⁊ hōde of the LORDE made all these? ^aIn whose honde is the soule of euery luyng thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, ^band the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde personnes there is wyszdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Yee with God is wyszdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell ⁊ foreknowlege. Yf he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? ^cYf he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Yf he let thē go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wyszdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wytyes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynges, and gyrdeth their loynes with a bonde, he ledeth awaye the prestes in to captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. ^dHe taketh the verite from out of the mouth, ⁊ disapoynteth ⁊ aged of their wyszdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke ^ewhat lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bringeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: He maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādringe out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stackeringe to and fro like droncken men.

The xij. Chapter.

LO, all this haue I sene with myne eye, ^fA herde with myne eare, ⁊ vnderstonde it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Neuerthelesse I am purposed to talke with the Allmightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are workmasters of lyes: and vnprofitable Phisicians altogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men! Therefore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of my lippes. Wil ye make answer for God with lyes, and māteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte ⁊ personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenynge? Thynke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reproue you, yf ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shall he not make you afraied, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpō you? youre remembraunce shalbe like the dust, ⁊ youre pryde shalbe turned to claye.

B Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherefore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. ^gBut yf I shewe and reproue myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there maye no Ypocrite come before him, Heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. C Withdrawe thine honde fro me, & let not the fearfull drede of the make me afraied. And then sende for me to the lawe, & I maye answere for my self: or els, let me speake, and geue thou the answere. How greate are my myszdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my trasgressions & offences. Wherefore hydest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye? Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyenge leaf, and folowe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt vtterly vndoo me, for & synnes of my youghth? Thou hast put my fote in the stockes: thou lokest narrowly vnto all my pathes, & marcest the steppes of my fete: where as I (notwithstandinge) must consume like as a foule carion, and as a cloth that is moth eaten.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A MAN that is borne of a woman, hath but a shorte tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cometh vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He flyeth as it were a shadowe, and neuer continueth in one state. Thinkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon soch one, and to brynge me before the in iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vnclene thinge? No body. The dayes of man are shorte, & nombre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his boundes, he can not go beyonde them. Go from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyrelinge doth.

B Yf a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the branches againe: For though a rote be waxen olde and deed in the grounde, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dried vp, & the ryuers when they be emptye, are fylled agayne thorow the flowinge waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vp ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: & to appoynte me a tyme, wherein thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgremage am I lokinge, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne hondes.

C For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes washshe awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou preuayleest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and putttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipshe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Whye he lyueth, his flesh must haue trauayle: and whye the soule is in him, he must be in sorowe.

The xv. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphas the Themanite, and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue soch an answer (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fylly his stomacke with anger? Thou reprocuest with wordes, that are nothinge wroth: and speakest the thinges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it asyde, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answer. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete counsell of God, that all wysdome is to litle for &? What knowest thou, & we knowe not? What vnderstondest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee soch as haue lyued longer then thy forefathers.

B Dost thou nomore regarde the comforte of God? but thy wicked wordes wil not suffre the. Why doth thine herte make the so proude? Why stondest thou so greatly in thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, ⁊ thy mynde is so puft vp agaynst God ⁊ lettest soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vncleane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amōge his owne sanctes: "yee the very hea- uens are vnclene in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, ⁊ hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the londe was geuen, that no straunger shulde come amonge them.

C The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, ⁊ the nombre of a tyrauntes yeares is vnkowne. A fearfull sounde is euer in his eares, ⁊ when it is peace, yet feareth he destruction: He beleueth neuer to be deluyered out of darcknesse, the swearde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his luyinge, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darcknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefulnesse make him afraied, ⁊ cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, ⁊ armed himself agaynst ⁊ Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, ⁊ with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykyng. Therefore shall his dwellynge be in desolate cities, ⁊ in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

D He shall not be rich, nether shall his sub- stance continue, ner encrease vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darcknesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with ⁊ blast of the mouth of God shal he be takē awaie. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness ner treuth, so sore is he disceaue with vanite.

He shall perish, afore his tyme be worne out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be pluckte of as an vntymely grape from ⁊ vyne, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregation of Ypocrites is vnfrutefull, ⁊ the fyre shal consume the houses of soch, as are gredy to receaue giftes. "He conceaueth trauayle, he beareth myschefe, ⁊ his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The xvi. Chapter.

I JOB answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes ⁊ herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy vayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I coude speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with ⁊ talkinge of my lyppes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tōge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stōdeth vp a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasseth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy skouleth vpon me with his eyes.

They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, "and smytten me vpon the cheke despite- fully, they haue eased the selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deluyered me in to the hondes of ⁊ wicked. I was somtyme in wealth, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the necke, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compased me rounde aboute with his dartes, he hath wounded my loynes, ⁊ not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geuē me one wounde vpon another, and is fallē vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my skynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

C My face is swollē with wepinge, ⁊ myne eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is clene. O earth, couer not my bloude, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witnesse is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboue in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might plete with God, as one man doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, ⁊ I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turne agayne.

The xviij. Chapter.

A MY breth fayleth, my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I haue diseaued no man, yet must myne eye cōtinue in heuynesse. O delyuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast with holdē their hertes from vnderstōdinge, therefore shall they not be set vp an hye. He promiseth his frēdes parte of his good, but his owne childrē spende it. He hath made me as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge thē. My countenance is heuy for very anger, & the membres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mē therefore shall wel cōsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Ypocrite.

B The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he ſ̄ hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger & stronger. As for you, turne you, & get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanished awaye, which haue vexed myne herte, chaunginge the night in to daye, & ſ̄ light in to darcknes. Though I tary neuer so moch, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corrupcion my fether, and the wormes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pytt, & lye with me in the dust.

The xviij. Chapter.

A THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marke well, and considre, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as beestes, & reputed so vyle in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal ſ̄ earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place because of ſ̄? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shalbe put out with him. His presumptuous goings shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fote shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pyttfall in the waye.

Fearfulnesse shal make him afraied on euery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Honger shalbe his substaunce, and mysfortune shall hange vpon him. He shall eate his owne skynne, yee his owne armes shall he deuoure, beyng a firstborne of death. All his comforte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shall brynge him to the kyng. Other men shall dwel in his house (which now is none of his) and brymstone shalbe scatered vpon his habitacion. His rotes shalbe dried vp beneth, & aboue shall his haruest be cut downe. His remembrance shall perish from the earth, & his name shall not be praysed in the stretes: he shalbe dryuen from the light in to darcknesse, and be cast clene out of the worlde. He shall nether haue children ner kynszfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge & olde shalbe astonysht at his death. Soch are now the dwellinges of the wicked, and this is ſ̄ place of him that knoweth not God.

The xix. Chapter.

IOB answered, & sayde: How lōge wil ye vex me mynde, & trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye reprobud me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce youre selues agaynst me, & accuse me to be a wicked personne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, ſ̄ it is God, which hath handled me so violētly, & hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I crie, yet violēce is done vnto me, I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentēce with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I cā not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, & taken the crowne awaye fro my heade. He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His men of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. "He hath put my brethren farre awaye fro me, and such as were of myne acquaintance, are become straügers vnto me. Myne owne kynsz folkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembrance. The seruantes and maydens of myne owne house take me for a straüger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

When I call vpon my seruäut, he geueth me no answer: no though I prairie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despyse me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All such as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my skynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the skynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vex me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

O that my wordes were written, O that they were put in a booke: wolde God they were grauē with an yron pēne in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this skynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But bewarre of the swearde, for the swearde wylbe avenged of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The xx. Chapter.

THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to answer. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the checkynge & reprove, therfore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstōdinge. Knowest thou not this, namely: that from the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Ypocrytes continued but ſ twyncklinge of an eye? Though he be magnified vp to the heaue, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donge: In so moch ſ they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in ſ night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, & his place knoweth him nomore. His childrē go a begginge, their handes bringe thē to sorow and heynessee.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, which shal lie downe with him in ſ earth. Whē wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyl he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poysen of serpētes within his body. The riches ſ he deuoureth, shall he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brokes of hony and butter: But labour shall he, & yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate trauayle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shall he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, ſ he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prosper. Though he had plenteousnesse of euery thinge, yet was he poore, & therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though ſ wicked haue neuer so moch to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapens, he shall be shott with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, & go out at his backe, and a glisteringe swearde thorow ſ gall of him, feare shal come vpō him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkyndled fyre shal consume him, and loke what remayneth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heauen shall declare his wickednesse, & the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substance that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perish, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. "This is the porcion that y^e wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The xxi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende youre selues. Suffre me a litle, that I maye speake also, and the laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my sprete be the in sore trouble? Marck me well, be abaszshed, and laye youre hāde vpon youre mouth. For whē I pondre & conside this, I am afayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. ^aWherefore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, & increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, & their generacion before their eyes.^b Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte the. Their bullocke gendreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfrutefull.

B They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the daunce. ^cThey beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welthyngesse: but sodenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. ^dWhat maner of felowe is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vtterly no goodnesse in them, therefore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. ^eHow oft shal the candle of y^e wicked be put out? how oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wrath? ^fYee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

C And though God saue their childre from soch sorowe, yet wil he so rewarde the selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearful wrath of the Allmightie. For whath careth he, what become of his housholde after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter then an arowe.

In as moch the as God hath y^e hiest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie & at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, & the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightuously. ^gFor ye saye: where is the prynces palace? where is the dwellynge of the vngodly: Axe eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens & dedes) he shal tell you, ^hthat the wicked is keppe vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngraciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. The shal he be fayne to be buried amoge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, & there are innumerable gone before him. O how vayne is the comforte y^e geue me? Are not youre answers cleane contrary to right and treuth?

The xxiiij. Chapter.

¶ JOB answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heuy amonge my groninges. O that I might se him ⁊ fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes:

That I might knowe, what answere he wolde geue me: ⁊ that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power ⁊ strength, or wyll he leane him self vtterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I cā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pondre his workes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeth himself, ŷ I can not se him. 'But as for my waye, he knoweth it: ⁊ trieth me as ŷ golde in ŷ fyre.

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaudemēt of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shut vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back? He doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. He rewardeth me in to my bosome, ⁊ many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is ŷ cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I considre him, I am afraied of him. For in so moch as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

¶ CONSIDERINGE then that there is no tyme hyd from the Allmightie, how happeneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? to couer them and kepe them from colde :

B So that when the showers in the mountaynes haue rayned vpon them, & they be all wett, they haue none other succoure, but to kepe them amonge the rockes.

They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in preson : In so moch that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the hungrie beare the sheeues. The poore are fayne to labour in their oyle mylles, yee and to treade in their wyne presses, and yet to suffre thyrst. "The whole cite crieth vnto the LORDE with sighinge, the soules of the slayne make their complaynte : But God destroyeth them not for all this, where as they (not with stödinge) are rebellious and disobedient enemies : which seke not his light and waye, ner turne agayne in to his path.

C The eye of the vngodly is like the aduou-

In the night season they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe ſ light. They plucke downe the mightie with their power, & when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme pouerte, & takē out of the waye : yee & vtterly plucte of as the eares of sayde : Power & feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his hynesse, whose men of warre are innumerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. "But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iustified? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparison to him, & the starres are vnclene in his sight. How moch more thē, mā, that is but corrupcion : and the sonne of man, which is but a worme?

The xxij. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O how helpest A thou the weake? what comforte geuest thou vnto him that hath no strēgth? Where is ſ cōcell ſ thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome? Wilt thou so shewe thine excellent rightuousnes? Before whom hast thou spoken those wordes? Who made the breth to come out of thy mouth? The giauntes & worthies ſ are slayne, & lye vnder ſ worlde with their cōpanions : yee & all they which dwell beneath in the hell are not hyd frō him, & the very destruccion it self cā not be kepte out of his sight. He stretcheth out ſ north ouer the emptie, & hägeth ſ earth vpō nothinge. He byndeth ſ water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it cā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

B "He hath cōposed the waters with certayne boundes, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē trēble & quake at his reprove. "He stilleth the see with his power, & thorow his wysdome hath he set forth ſ worlde. With his sprete hath he garnished the heauēs, & with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serpēt. This is now a shorte summe of his doynge. But who is able sufficiently to rehearse his workes? Who can perceaue and vnderstonde ſ thondre of his power?

lyueth (which hath taken awaye my power fro me) & the Allmightie, that hath vexed my mynde: My lippes shall talke of no vanite, and my tonge shal speake no disceate, whyle my breth is in me, and as longe as the wynde (that God hath geuen me) is in my nostrels.

God forbydde, that I shulde graunte youre cause to be right. As for me, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go fro myne innocency. My rightuous dealyng wil I kepe fast, & not forsake it: For my conscience reproueth me not in all my conuersacion. Therefore myne enemy shalbe founde as the vngodly, & he ſhal taketh parte agaynst me, as the vnrightuous. Hath he soch pleasure & delyte in the Allmightie, that he darre all-waye call vpon God? I wil teach you in the name of God, & the thinge that I haue of ſhe Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. The xxviii. Chapter.

THERE are places where syluer is molte, & where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, & stones resoluēd to metall. The darcknes shall once come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, & the horrible shadowe, with the ryuer of water parteth he a sunder the straunge people, ſhe knoweth no good neighbourheade: such as are rude, vnmanerly & boysteous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, & ſhe which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whose stones are clene Saphirs, and where ſhe clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not, that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin ſhe proude & hye mynded walke not, & where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, & ouerthroweth the mountaynes. Ryuers flowe out of the rockes, & loke what is pleasaut, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greates floudes together, & the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wysdome? Where is the place that men fynde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she foude in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most fyne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as once to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cometh out of Inde, maye in no wyse be likened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaut and fayre so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wysdome? & where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee & frō the foules of the ayre. Destruction & death saie: we haue herde tell of her with oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, & knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the worlde, and loketh vpon all that is vnder the heauē. When he weyed the wyndes, & measured ſhe waters: when he set the rayne in ordre, and gaue the mightie floudes a lawe: Then dyd he se her, thē declared he her, prepared her and kneue her. And vnto man he sayde: Beholde, to feare the LORDE, is wysdome: ^a to forsake euell, is vnderstandinge.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A SO Iob proceeded and wete forth in his comunicacion, sayenge: O y I were as I was in the monethes by past, ^a in the dayes whē God preserued me: when his light shyned vpon my heade: whē I wente after the same light ^a shyne euē throw the darknesse. As it stode with me, whē I was welthy ^a had ynough: whē God prospered my house: when the allmightie was with me: when my housholde folkes stode aboute me: whē my wayes ranne ouer with butter, ^a when the stony rockes gaue me ryuers of oyle: when I wente thorow the cite vnto the gate, ^a whē they set B me a chayre in y strete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd thē selues, ^a when the aged arose, ^a stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of their talkinge, ^a laied their hāde to their mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rofe of their mouthes. When all they y herde me, called me happie: ^a when all they y sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deliuered y poore whē he cried, ^a the fatherlesse y wanted helpe. He y shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, ^a y widowes hert praised me. And why? I put vpon me righteousnes, which couered me as a garmēt, ^a equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, ^a a fote to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, ^a whē I knew not their cause, I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y vnrightuous, ^a ^b ^c plucte the spoyle out of their teth.

C Therefore, I thought verely, y I shulde haue dyed in my nest: ^a y my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spred out by the waters syde, ^a the dew laye vpō my corne. My honoure increased more ^a more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue eare, me they regarded, ^a with sylence they taried for my coucell. Yf I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge thē.

They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: ^a gaped vpon me, as the groude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: ^a this testimony of my cōtenaunce pleased thē nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chefe, ^a sat as a kynge amonge his seruantes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in heuynesse.

The xiiij. Chapter.

BUT now they that are my inferiours ^a ^{B yonger then I, haue me in derision: yee euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scorne to haue set with the dogges of my catell. The power ^a strēth of their hādes might do me no good, ^a as for their age, it is spēt ^a past awaye without eny profit. For very misery ^a hunger, they wente aboute in the wilderness like wretches ^a beggers, pluckyng vp herbes from amonge the buszshes, ^a the Iunipers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues ^a dennes of the earth. Vpō the drye heeth wēte they aboute crienge, ^a in the brome hilles they gathered them together. They were the children of fooles ^a vylandes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now am I their songe, ^a am become their iestinge stocke. they abhorre me, they fle farre fro me ^a stayne my face with spetle. For y LORDE hath opened his quyuer, he hath hytt me, ^a put a brydle in my mouth. Vpon my right hāde they rose together agaynst me, they haue hurte my fete, made a waye to destroye me, ^a my path haue they clene marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they neded no man to helpe thē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y breakynge in of waters, ^a came in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnesse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vanisheth awaye more swiftly then wynde, ^a my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therefore is my mynde poured full of heuynesse, ^a y dayes of trouble haue takē holde vpon me. My bones are pearced thorow in y night season, ^a my synewes take no rest. With all their power haue they chaunged my garmēt, ^a gyrded me therewith, as it were with a coate. I am euē as it were claye, ^a am} become like aszshes & dust. Whē I crie vnto the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & with thy violēt hāde thou takest parte agaynst me. In tymes past thou didest set me vp an hye, as it were aboue & winde, but now hast thou geuē me a very sore fall. Sure I am, & thou wilt delyuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyuinge. Now vse not mē to do violēce vnto the, & are destroyed all-ready: but where hurte is done, there vse thei to helpe. Dyd not I wepe in & tyme of trouble? Had not my soule cōpassion vpō & poore? Yet neuerthelesse where as I looked for good, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darcknesse. My bowels seeth with in me & take no rest, for & dayes of my trouble are come vpō me. Mekely & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displeasure: I stode vp in & cōgregacion, & commoned with thē. But now I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My skynne vpō me is turned to black, & my bones are brēt with heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to wepyng.

The xxi. Chapter.

I MADE a couenant with myne eyes, & I wolde not ^aloke vpō a dāsell. For how greate a porciō shal I haue of God frō aboue? & what enheritaūce frō & Almightie on hie? As for the vngodly & he & ioyneith himself to & cōpani of wicked doers shal not destruccion & misery come vpon him? ^bDoth not he se my wayes, & tell all my goinges? Yf I haue cleued vnto vanite, or yf my fete haue runne to disceaue: let me be weyed in an eauen balaunce, that God maye se my innocency. Yf so be that I haue withdrawn my fote out of the right waye, yf my hert hath folowed myne eye sight, yf I haue stayned or defyled my hōdes: O then is it reason that I sowe, and another eate: yee that my generacion and posterite be clene rote out. ^cYf my hert hath lusted after my neighbours wife, or yf I haue layed wayte at his dore: O then let my wife be another mans harlot, and let other lye with her. For ^dthis is a wickednesse and synne, that I was fayne to be punished, yee a fyre that vtterly shulde consume, & rote out all my substance. Dyd I euer thynke scorne to do right vnto my seruātes and maydens, when they had eny matter agaynst me? But seynge that God wil sytt in iudgment, what shal I do? And for so much as he wil nedes vyset me, what answere shal I geue him? He that fashioned me in my mothers wombe, made he not him also? were we not both shapen alyke in oure mothers bodies? When the poore desyred eny thinge at me, haue I denyed it them? Haue I caused & wyddowe stonde waytinge for me in vayne? Haue I eaten my porcion alone, that the fatherles hath had no parte with me? (for mercy grewe vp with me fro my youth, & compassion fro my mothers wombe.) Haue I sene eny man perish thorow nakednes & want of clothinge? Or, eny poore man for lack of rayment, whose sydes thanked me not, because he was warmed with & woll of my shepe?

Dyd I euer lyft vp my honde to hurte the fatherlesse? Yee in the gate where I sawe my self to be in auctorite: Thē let myne arme fall fro my shulder, & myne arme holes be broken from the ioyntes. For I haue euer feared & vengeance & punyshmēt of God, & knew very well, & I was not able to beare his burthē. Haue I put my trust in golde? Or, haue I sayde to the fynest golde of all: thou art my cōfidence? Haue I reioysed because my substance was greate, and because my honde gat so much? ^eDyd I euer greatly regarde the rysinge of the Sonne? Or, had I the goinge downe of & Moone in greate reputacion? Hath my hert medled priuily with eny disceate? Or, dyd I euer kysse myne owne honde (that were a wickednesse worthy to be punished, for then shulde I haue denyed the God that is aboue.) Haue I euer reioysed at the hurte of myne enemy? ^fOr, was I euer glad, & eny harme happened vnto him? Oh no, I neuer suffred my mouth to do soch a sinne, as to wysch him euell. Yet they of myne owne housholde saye: who shal let vs, to haue oure bely ful of his flesh? I haue not suffred a stranger to lye with out, but opened my dores vnto him. Haue I euer done eny wicked dede where thorow I shamed my self before men: Or eny abhominacion, & I was fayne to hyde it? For yf I had feared eny greate multitude of people: Or yf I had bene dysposed of þ̄ symple, Oh then shulde I haue bene afrayed. Thus haue I quyetly spent my lyfe, and not gone out at þ̄ dore. O that I had one which wolde heare me. Lo, this is my cause. Let þ̄ Allmightie geue me answer: ⁊ let him that is my cōtrary party, sue me with a lybell. Then shall I take it vpon my shulder, ⁊ as a garlāde aboute my heade. I haue tolde the nombre of my goinges, and delyuered them vnto him as to a prynce. But yf case be that my londe crie agaynst me, or yf the forowes therof make eny complaynte: yf I haue eaten the frutes therof vnpayed for, yee yf I haue greued eny of the plow men: Than, let thistles growe in steade of my wheate, ⁊ thornes for my barlye.

The xxxij. Chapter.

SO these thre men wolde stryue nomore with Iob, because he helde himself a rightuous man. But Eliu the sonne of Barachel the Bussite ^a of the kynred of Ram, was very sore displeased at Iob, that he called himself iust before God. And with Iobs thre frēdes he was angrie also, because they had founde no reasonable answer to ouercome him. Now taried Eliu till they had ended their communication with Iob, for why? they were elder then he. So when Eliu þ̄ sonne of Barachel þ̄ Bussite sawe, that these thre men were not able to make Iob answer, he was myscontent: so that he gaue answer himself, and sayde: ^b Consideringe þ̄ I am yonge, ⁊ ye be men of age, I was afrayed, ⁊ durst not shewe forth my mynde, for I thought thus within my self: ^c It becōmeth olde men to speake, ⁊ the aged to teach wysdome. Euery mā ^d (no doute) hath a mynde, but it is the inspyracion of the Allmightie that geueth vnderstondinge. All men are not wyse, nether doth euery aged man vnderstonde the thinge that is lauffull. Therefore wil I speake also (in so farre as I maye be herde) ⁊ wil shewe yow myne opinyon. For whē I had wayted till ye made an ende of youre talkynge, ⁊ herde youre wysdome, what argumētes ye made in youre communication: yee when I had diligently pondred what ye sayde, I founde not one of you that made eny good argument agaynst

Iob, or that directly coude make answer vnto his wordes: lest ye shulde prayse youre selues, to haue founde out wysdome: because it is God that hath cast him out, ⁊ no man. Ne-uerthelesse, seynge he hath not spoken vnto me, therfore wil I not answer him as ye haue done (for they were so abaszshed, that they coude not make answer, ner speake one worde) but in so moch as ye wil not speake, stondinge still like dome men ⁊ makinge no answer: I haue a good hope for my parte to shappe him an answer ⁊ to shewe him my meanyng. For I am full of wordes, ⁊ the sprete that is within me, cōpelleth me. Beholde, I am as the new wyne which hath no vente, ⁊ bursteth the new vessels in sunder. Therfore wil I speake, that I maye haue vēte: I wil open my lyppes, and make answer. I will regarde no maner of personne, no man wil I spare. For yf I wolde go aboute to please mē, I knowe not how soone my maker wolde take me awaye.

The xxxij. Chapter.

WHEREFORE, heare my wordes (O Iob) ⁊ herken vnto all, that I wyl saye: Beholde, I wil open my mouth, ⁊ my tonge shal speake out of my chawes. My hert shall ordre my wordes a right, ⁊ my lyppes shal talke of pure wysdome. The sprete of God hath made me, ⁊ the breth of the Allmightie hath geuē me my life. Yf thou cāst, then geue me answer: prepare thy self to stōde before me face to face. Beholde, before God am I euen as thou, for I am fashioned and made euē of the same moulde. Therefore, thou nedest not be afrayed of me, nether nedest thou to feare, that my auctorite shal be to heuy for the. Now hast thou spoken in myne eares, ⁊ I haue herde þ̄ voyce of thy wordes: I am clene without eny fawte, ^e I am innocent, ⁊ there is no wickednesse in me. But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, ⁊ taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stockes, ⁊ loketh narrowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vnreasonable wordes of thyne wil I make answer.

Shulde God be reprovod of man? Why doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geueth the no accomptes of all his doinges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search whether it be right. "In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombryng cometh vpō mē,^a that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he infourmeth them, & sheweth thē planely, that it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, delyuereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule from destruction, & his life from f̄ swearde. he chasteneth him with sicknesse, & bringeth him to his bed: he laieth sore punyshmēt vpō his bones, so that his life maye awaye with no bred, & his soule abhorreth to eate eny dayntie meate: In so moch, that his body is cleue consumed awaye, & his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth out to destruction, & his life to death. Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto mā, and to shewe him the right waye: thē the LORDE is mercifull vnto him, & sayeth: He shalbe delyuered, f̄ he fall not downe to destruction, for I am sufficiently recōciled. Than his flesh (which hath bene in misery & trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth. For yf he submitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, & sheweth him his countenance ioyfully, & rewardeth man for his righteousnes. Such a respecte hath he vnto mē. Therefore let a man cōfesse, (& saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened & reformed me: I dyd vnrightuously, neuertheless he hath not recōpensd me thereafter. Yee he hath delyuered my soule from destruction, & my life, that it seyth f̄ light. Lo, thus worketh God all waie with mā, that he kepeth his soule from perishinge, & latteth him enioye the light of f̄ lyuinge. Marke well (O Iob) & heare me: holde the still, vntill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answer me and speake, for thy answer pleaseth me. Yf thou hast nothinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wysdome.

The xxxij. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his cōmunicacion, & sayde: Heare my wordes (O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye f̄ haue vnderstandinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth & discerneth the wordes. "As for the iudgmēt, let vs seke it out amonge oure selues, f̄ we maye knowe what is right. And why? Iob hath sayde: I am rightuous, but God doth me wronge. I must nedes be a liar, though my cause be right: & violently am I plagued, where as I made no fawte. where is there soch one as Iob, f̄ drinketh vp scornefulnes like water? which goeth in f̄ company of wicked doers, & walketh with vngodly mē? For he saieth: Though a mā be good, yet is he naught before God. Therefore herke vnto me, ye f̄ haue vnderstandinge.

Farre be it from God, that he shulde medle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almightye, f̄ he shulde medle with vnrightuous dealinge: but he rewardeth the workes of man, and causeth euery man to fynde acordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmēt of the Almightye is not vnrightuous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his sprete and breth vnto him? "All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. Yf thou now haue vnderstōdinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loeth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euen the same, f̄ knoweth the rebellious kynge, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath no respecte vnto the personnes of f̄ lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thē poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twinkle off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, & be taken awaye without hondes. "And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goinges. There is no darcnes ner thicke shadowe, f̄ can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shalbe suffred to go in to iudgment with God.

"Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyshe and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in f̄ steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mē. Therefore turned they back traytorously and vnfaithfully frō hī, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused ¶ ELIU spake morouer, and sayde: Think-est thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, thē I y am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the & thy frendes: loke vnto the heauē, & beholde it: cōsidre y cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. Yf thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? Yf thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? Yf thou be righteous, what gueest thou him? "Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of such an vngodly personne as thou, & of y sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie & cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrantes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ad y shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night? Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the bestes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē.

The xxij. Chapter.

Yf eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and y because of the wickednesse off proude tyrantes. But yf a man call vpon

God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Allmightie accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy self before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisitions. Therefore hath Iob opened his mouth but in vayne, ad folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The xxij. Chapter.

¶ ELIU proceeded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto y yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherwithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not awaye y mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdom.

As for the vngodly, he preserueth thē not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes awaye from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cōfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes ad dedes and the synnes wherwith they haue vsed cruell violence.

He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. Yf they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure ad ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, & perish or euer they be awarre. As for such as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrites, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe with y condēd. The poore delyuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth such as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: & yf thou wilt holde the quyet, he shal fylle thy table with plenteuousnesse.

Neuerthelesse, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffice. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with crueltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the ⁊ all such mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hytherto thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there such a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D O conside how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loauē and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to ⁊ experience of his yeares. He turneth ⁊ water to smal droppe, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, "so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can sprede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpon them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundance of meate. In ⁊ turnynge of a hande he hydeth the light, ⁊ at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysynge vp therof sheweth he to his frendes and to the catell.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

AT this my hert is astonniēd, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse ⁊ goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth such a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sounde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not cōprehende. ^a When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The beestes cripe in to their dennes, ⁊ take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth, ⁊ the waters are shed abroad. The cloudes do their labour in geuyng moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, accordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth thē thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Job) stonde still, and conside the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coicel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coicell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke vpon, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hī, for we are vnmete because of darknes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā seith not the light, ⁊ he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the north, but the prayse and honour off Gods feare commeth frō God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rightuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stōde in feare of hī?

The xxxviij. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE^c vnto Job out A of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolysh wordes? Gyrde vp thy loynes like a mā, for I will question the, se thou geue me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed ⁊ foundations of the earth? Tell planely yf thou hast vnderstandinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spred ⁊ lyne vpon it? Where vpon stōde the pilers of it? ^d Or, who layed ⁊ corner stone? where wast thou when the mornyng starres gaue me prayse, and

When I made the cloudes to be a couering for it, and swedled it with ^b \dot{y} dareke? ^c when I gaue it my cōmaundement, makinge dores τ barres for it, sayenge: Hither to shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thou laye downe thy proude and hye waves. Hast thou geuē the mornyng charge (as soone as thou wast borne) and shewed the dayesprynge his place, \dot{y} it might take holde of the corners of the earth, τ \dot{y} the vngodly might be shakē out? Their tokēs τ weapēs hast thou turned like claye, τ set thē vp agayne as the chaunginge of a garment. Yee thou hast spoyled the vngodly off their light, τ brokē the arme of the proude. Camest thou euer in to the groude of the see, Or, hast thou walked in \dot{y} lowe corners of \dot{y} depe? Haue the gates of death bene opened vnto the or hast thou sene the dore of euerlastyge treasure? Hast thou also perceaued, how brode \dot{y} earth is? Now yf thou hast knowlege of all, thē shewe me where light dwelleth, and where darcknes is: \dot{y} thou mayest bringe vs vnto their quarters, yf thou cāst tell the waye to their houses. Knewest thou (when thou wast borne) how olde thou shuldest be?

Wentest thou euer in to the treasures off the snowe, or hast thou sene ^d \dot{y} secrete places of the hale: which I haue prepared agaynst the tyme of trouble, agaynst the tyme of batell τ warre? By what waye is the light parted, τ the heate dealt out vpon earth? Who deuydeth the abundaunce of waters in to ryuers, or who maketh a waye for the stormy wether, \dot{y} it watereth τ moystureth \dot{y} drye τ baren grounde: to make the grasse growe in places where no body dwelleth, τ in the wildernesses where no mā remaineth? therof vpō earth? Morouer, cāst thou lift vp thy voyce to \dot{y} cloudes, \dot{y} they maye poure downe a greate rayne vpō the? Canst thou thōdre also \dot{y} they maye go their waye, τ be obediēt vnto the, sayēge: lo, here are we? Who geueth sure wysdome, or stedfast vnderstōdinge? who nombreth the cloudes in wisdom? who stilleth \dot{y} vehement waters of the heauē? who turneth the clottes to dust, τ thē to be clottes agayne? Hunttest thou the praye frō the Lyon, or fedest thou his whelpes lyēge in their dēnes τ lurking in their couches? who prouydeth meate for the rauen, whē his yonge ones crie vnto God, ād fle aboute for want of meate?

The xxxij. Chapter.

KNOWEST thou the tyme when the wilde gotes brige forth their yōge amōge the stony rockes? Or layest thou wayte when the hindes vse to fawne? Rekenest thou the monethes after they ingendre, \dot{y} thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast their yonge ones, τ when they are deluyered off their trauayle τ payne? How their yōge ones growe vp τ waxe greate thorow good fedinge? who letteth the wilde asse go fre, or who lowseth the bōdes of the Moole? Vnto whō I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, τ the vtilld londe to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryer: but to seke their pasture aboute the moūtaynes, τ to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyll the vnicorne be so tame as to do \dot{y} seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribbe? Cāst thou bynde \dot{y} yock aboute him in thy forowes, to make him plowe after the in \dot{y} valleys? God hath taken wisdome from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstandinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hye, and careth nether for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or lerned him to bowe downe his neck with feare: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull? he breaketh & grounde with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyuers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glistre: yet russeth he in fearsly, and beateth vpon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawnes blowe, tush (sayeth he) for he smell-eth the batell asfarre of, & noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshauke flyeth towards the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hie at thy commaundement? He abyde in the stony rockes, ad vpon the hie toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. ^a His yonge ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deed body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Morouer, God spake vnto Iob and sayde: Can he that stryeth with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Iob answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answer the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye nomore.

The xli. Chapter.

A THEN spake the LORDE vnto Iob out of the storme, and sayde: ^bgyrde vp thy loynes like a man, and tell me the thige that I will axe the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me, & thou thy self mayest be made rightuous? Is thine arme then like the arme of God? Maketh thy voyce soch a soude as his doth? Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy ioly araye, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all & proude, loke well, that thou makest all soch as be stubburne, to obeye: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the downe in to the myre, and couer their faces with darknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath sauéd the.

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I made with the) which eateth haye as an oxe: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spredeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his vaynes are stiff. His shynnes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like staues of yrō. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernes for him, & the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amōge the redes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Iordane without eny trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ad laye a snare for him?

C Darrest thou drawe out ^cLeuiathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chaftes thorow with an aule? Wyl he make many fayre wordes with the (thynkest thou) or flatre the? Wyl he make a couenaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the contynuall seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyme with him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye hew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchant men? Canst thou fyll the nett with his skynne, or & fysh pānyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to conside what harme might happē the there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thynkest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Euery man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why? there darre none be so bolde, as to rayse him vp.

agayne? All thinges vnder heauen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake fayre. Who lifeth him vp and stripeth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his brydle? Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath horrible tethe rounde aboute. His body is couered with scales as it were with shyldes, lockte in, kepte, and well copacte together. One is so ioynd to another, that no ayre can come in: Yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticke so together, that they can not be sundered. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrels there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remaineth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioynd so straye one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, ad as fast as the stythe that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afraied, and the waves heuy. Yff he drawe out the swerde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yro, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not away for him that bendeth the bowe, & as for slynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like y sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

counsell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therefore haue I spoken vnwisely, seynge these thinges are so hye, and passe myne vnderstandinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answer me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I se y with myne eyes. Wherefore I geue myne owne self y blame, and take repentaunce in the dust and ashes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Iob, he sayde vnto Eliphaz y Themanite: I am displeased with the & thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge y is right before me, like as my seruauant Iob hath done. Therefore take vij. oxen and seuen rammes, and go to my seruauant Iob,^d offre vp also for youre selues a brentofferynge, and lat my seruauant Iob praye for you. Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē y thinge which is right, like as my seruauant Iob hath done.

So Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad y Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite wētē their waye, and did acordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the personne off Iob, and the LORDE turned him vnto Iob, whē he prayed for his frendes: "Yee the LORDE gaue Iob twyse as moch as he had afore."

And thē came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquātaūce afore, and ate bred with him in his house, wondering at him, ad comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. "Euery mā gaue him a shepe and a Iewell of golde."

And the LORDE made Iob richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sonnes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, poerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the londē were none founde so fayre, as the daughters of Iob, & their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren. After this lyued Iob xl. yeaes, so that he sawe his children, & his childers children vnto the fourth generacion.^f And so he dyed, beinge olde & of a perfecte age.

HEARE my wordes (o LORDE) consider my callinge. O marke the voyce of my petition, my kynge & my God: for vnto the wil I make my praver. Heare my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the morninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee & $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ with diligēce. For thou art not the God $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwell with the. Soch as be cruell maye not stonde in thy sight, thou art an enemye vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE abhorreth the bloude thurstie and disceatfull. But as for me, ^aI wil come in to thy house, euen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: and in thy feare wyll I worshipe towards thy holy tēple. Lede me (o LORDE) in thy rightuousnesse, because of myne enemyes, and make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faithfulness in their mouthes: they dyssemble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceaue. Punysh them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlinesse, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse: yee let them euer be geuyng of thanks, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the rightuous: and with thy fauorable kyndnes thou defendest him, as with a shyld.

OH LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: ^cOh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. Haue mercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (o LORDE) & delyuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of gronyng: Euery night washe I my bedde, & water my couche with my teares. My countenaunce is chaunged for very inward grefe, I cōsume awaye, I haue so many enemyes. ^dAwaye fro me all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble peticiō, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemyes shalbe cōfounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The iijij. A psalme of David.

O LORDE oure gouernoure: how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? "Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklings thou hast ordered prayse, because of thine enemies, y^e thou mightest destroye the enemie and the auenger. For I conside thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh what is man, y^e thou art so myndfull of him? ether the sonne of mā that thou visitest him? "After thou haddest for a season made him lower thē the angels, thou crownedest him with honoure & glory. "Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy hondes: thou hast put all thinges in subiection vnder his fete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the beastes of the felde. The foules of the ayre: the fysh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LORDE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde?

The ij. A psalme of David.

I WIL geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte, "I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad & reioyse in the, yee my songes wil I make of thy name, o thou most hyest. Because thou hast dryūe myne enemies abacke, they were discōfited, & perished at thy presence. For thou hast manteyned my right and my cause: thou syttest in the Trone that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the Heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou putttest out their name for euer and euer. The enemies swerdes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthrowen their cities, their memoriall is perished with thē. But y^e LORDE endureth for euer, he hath prepared his seate vnto iudgmēt. He gouerneth y^e worlde with rightuousnes & ministrereth true iudgmēt vnto the people. The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therefore they y^e knowe thy name, put their trust in y^e: for thou (LORDE) neuer faylest thē, that seke the. "O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion, shewe y^e people of his doinges. And why? he maketh inquisition for their bloude, and remembreth them: "he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpō me (o LORDE) conside the trouble that I am in amōge myne enemies, thou that listest me vp from y^e gates of death. That I maye shewe all thy prayes within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge health. As for the Heithen, they are sunckē downe in the pytte that they made: in the same nette, which they spred out priuely, is their owne fote takē. Thus y^e LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whē the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked must be turned vnto hell, and all the Heithen y^e forget God. Here the Hebrues begynne the x. psalme.

WHY art thou gone so farre of, o LORDE? wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whye y^e vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desyre, the cuetous blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: "Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauaile & sorow. He syteth lurkyng in the gardens, that he maye pryuely murthur the innocent, his eyes are set vpō the poore. He lyeth waytinge secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauysh the poore, yee to rauish the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyth he, then oppresseth he & casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so ſ he will neuer se it. Aryse o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherefore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considrest the misery and sorowe: The poore geueth himselff ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the frendlesse. Breake thou ſ arme off the vngodly and malicious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, ye Heithen shal perish out off his londe. LORDE, thou hearest the desyrous longinge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The x. A psalme of Dauid.

IN the LORDE put I my trust: how will I ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byrde vpon youre hill? For lo, the vngodly haue bēt their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyer: "that they maye priuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundation haue they cast downe, what cā the rightuous thē do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: ^a He cōsidereth it with his eyes, ^b his eye lyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE seith both the rightuous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: this rewarde shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is rightuous, ād he loueth rightuousnes, his countenance beholdeth the thige ſ is iust.

The xi. A psalme of Dauid.

HELPE LORDE, for there is not one saynte more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the children off men. Euery man telleth lyes to his neyghoure, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, ād the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde preuayle: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, & because off the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe thē, and set thē at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: "euē as ſ syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Kepe thē therfore (o LORDE) and preserue vs frō this generacion for euer. The xij. A psalme of Dauid.

HOW longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE? for euer? how longe wilt thou hyde thy face fro me? Oh how lōge shall I seke counsell in my soule? how longe shall I be so vexed in my herte? how longe shal myne enemye triumphe ouer me? Considre, ād heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemye saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hī, for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (Yee I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest.)

Therefore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondesth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the coucell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. ^aOh y^e the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Thē shulde Iacob reioyce, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The xliij. A psalme of Dauid.

LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? ^awho shall rest vpō thy holy hill? Euen he y^e ledeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ad that speaketh the treuth from his herte. He y^e vseth no disceat in his tongue: he that doth no euell to his neighbour, & slaundreth not his neighbours. The xli. A psalme of Dauid.

PRESERVE me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y^e LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they y^e runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynkofferynges of bloude will not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. ^aThe LORDE himself is my good and my porcion, thou manteynest my enheritaūce. The lott is fallen vnto me in a fayre grounde, yee I haue a goodly heretage. I will thanke the LORDE for geuyng me warnynge: my reynes also haue chastened me in the night season. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes before me, ^afor he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be moued.

Therefore dyd my hert reioyce, & my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, ^anether shalt thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye with thy countenance. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euermore.

The xli. A psalme of Dauid.

The xviij. A psalme of Dauid when he was deliuered from the hande off Saul.

I WILL loue the (o LORDE) my strēgth. The LORDE is my succoure, my refuge, my Sauoure: my god, my helper i whō I trust: my buckler, y^e horne of my health, & my protectiō. I wil prayse y^e LORDE & call vpon him, ^aso shal I be safe fro myne enemies. The sorowes of death cōpassed me,^b & the brokes of vngodlynnes made me afraied. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpo me. Yet in my trouble I called vpo the LORDE, & cōplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy tēple, & my cōplaynte came before hī, yee euē in to his eares. ^cThē the earth trembled & quaked, the very fōndaciōs of the hilles shoke & were remoued, because he was wrothe. There wēt a smoke out of his nostrils, & a cōsumynge fyre out of his mouth, so y^e coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heauē & came downe, & it was darcke vnder his fete. He rode vpo the Cherubins & dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darcknesse his paylyon rounde aboute hī, with darcke water & thicke cloudes to couer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones & coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of y^e heauē, & the heyth gaue his thondre with hale stones & coales of fyre. He sent out his arrowes & scatred thē, he cast sore lighteninges, & destroyed thē. The springes of waters were sene, & the foundaciōs of the rōude worlde were discouered at thy chiding (o LORDE) at the blasteing & breth of thy displeasure. He sent downe fro the heyth to fetch me, & toke me out of greete waters. He deliuered me fro my stronge enemies, and fro my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but y^e LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also in to lyberte: & deliuered me, because he had a fauoure vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my righteous dealyng, & acordinge to the clēnesse of my hōdes shal he recōpense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaued myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & cast not out his commaundemētes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hī, & wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shal y^e LORDE rewarde me after my righteous dealinge, & acordinge vnto y^e clēnesse of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, & with y^e innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the clene thou shalt be clene ^d& with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, & brige downe the hye lokes of the proude. ^eThou lightest my cādle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my darcknesse to be light. For in the I can discōfit an hoost of mē: yee in my God I ca leape ouer the wall.

^fThe waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a shyld of defence, for all them that trust in him. ^gFor who is God, but the LORDE? ^hOr, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyrded me with strēgth and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my fete like hartes fete, and set me vp an hye. ⁱHe teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off stele. Thou hast geuē me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowne ynough vnder me for to go, that my fete steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my fete. Thou hast gyrded me with strength vnto y^e batell, thou hast throwē them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backes vpon me, thou hast destroyed thē y^e hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe thē: ^kyee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde thē not. I will beate ^lthem as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as y^e claye in the stretes. The rri. A psalme of David.

MY God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me?^a y wordes of my cōplaynte are farre fro my health. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou hearest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet dwellest thou in the Sanctuary, o thou worshipec of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, ad thou dydest deliyuer them. They called vpon the, and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not cōfounded. But as for me, I am a worme and no man: a very scorne of mē and the outcast of the people. All they y se me, laugh me to scorne: they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God,^b let him deliyuer him: let him helpe hi, yf he wil haue him.

But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wōbe:^c thou wast my hope, when I hanged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euer sence I was borne, thou art my God, euē fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me the, for trouble is harde at honde, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, fatt oxen close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaring lyon.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddest off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a potsherde, my tunge cleueth to my goomes, and thou hast brought me in to the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cōcell of y wicked hath layed sege agaynst me. They pearsed my hondes and my fete, I might haue tolde all my bones: as for them, they stode staringe and lokinge vpon me. They haue parted my garmentes amonge them,^d ad cast lottes vpon my vesture.

C But be not thou farre fro me, o LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist the to helpe me. Deliyuer my soule from the swearde, my dear-linge from the power of the dogge. Saue me from the lyons mouth, and heare me frō amonge the hornes off the vnicornes.^e So will I declare thy name vnto my brethren,^f in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE ye that feare him: Magnifie him all ye sede of Iacob, & let all y sede of Israel feare hi. For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the myserable estate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face fro me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and perfourme my vowes in the sight off all the that feare the. The poore shal eate ad be satisfied: they y seke after y LORDE shal prayse him: youre herte shal lyue for euer.

All the endes of the worlde shal remembre them selues, & be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the Heithen shal worshipec before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of y Heithen. All such as be fat vpō earth, shal eate also and worshipec: All they that lye in the dust, and lyue so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, & declare his rightuousnes: vnto a people that shal be borne,^g whō the LORDE hath made.

The rriij. A psalme of David.

THE LORDE is my shepherde,^h I can wante nothinge. He fedeth me in a grene pasture, ad ledeth me to a fresh water. He quickeneth my soule, & bringeth me forth in the waye of rightuousnes for his names sake. Though I shulde walke now in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy staffe & thy shepehoke cōforte me. Thou preparast a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou anoyntest my heade with oyle, & fyllest my cuppe full. Oh let thy louyng kyndnes & mercy folowe me all the dayes off my life, that I maye dwell in the house off the LORDE for euer.

lerneth he his wayes. All the wayes of the LORDE are very mercy & faithfulnessse, vnto such as kepe his testament and couenaunt.
For thy names sake,^c O LORDE, be mercifull vnto my synne, for it is greate. What so euer
he be that feareth the LORDE, he shal shewe

Herkē vnto my voyce (O LORDE) when I crie vnto the: haue mercy vpon me & heare me. My hert speaketh vnto the, my face seketh thee, yee LORDE, thy face wil I seke. O hyde not thou thy face fro me, cast not thy seruauent of in displeasure. Thou art my succoure, leaue me not, nether forsake me, O God my Sauoure. For my father and my mother haue forsaken me, but the LORDE hath taken me vp. Shewe me thy waye O LORDE, and lede me in the right path, because of myne enemies. serued. For they regarde not the workes of the LORDE, ner the operacion of his hādes: therefore shal he breake them downe, and not buylde them vp. Praise be ⁱthy LORDE, for he hath herde the voyce of my humble peticiō. ^jThe LORDE is my strēth and my shyld: my herte hoped in him, & I am helped: therefore my hert daūseth for ioye, and I will synge prayes vnto him. The LORDE is the strength of his people, he is the defender and Sauoure of his anoynted.

O helpe thy people, geue thy blessinge vnto thy enheritaunce: ^kfede them, and set them vp for euer.

The xxij. A psalme of Dauid.

A SCRIBE vnto the LORDE (o ye mightie) ascribe vnto the LORDE worshipe and strength. Geue the LORDE the honoure of his name, bowe youre selues to the holy magesty of the LORDE. ^lIt is the LORDE that commaundeth the waters: It is the glorious God that maketh ^mthunder: it is the LORDE ⁿruleth the see. He maketh them to skippe like a calfe: ^pLibanus and Sirion like a yonge vnycorne. ^qThe voyce of the LORDE deuideth the flames of fyre: the voyce of the LORDE shaketh the wilderness, yee the LORDE shaketh the wilderness of Cades.

But as soone as thou turnedest thy face for me, I was brought in feare. Thē cried I vnto ŷ (O LORDE) yee vnto ŷ LORDE made I my prayer. That my honour might syng prayes vnto the with out ceassyng: O LORDE my God, I wil geue thanks vnto the for euer.

The xxx. A psalme of David.

A I N the, O LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to cōfucion,^a but delyuer me in thy rightuousnesse. Bowe downe thine eare to me, make haist to delyuer me: be thou my stronge rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O be thou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett ŷ they haue layed priuely for me,^d for thou art my strēth.

In to thy hondes I commende my sprete: thou hast delyuered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowne my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not delyuered me ouer in to the hōdes of the enemye, but hast set my fete in a large rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heynesne, yee my soule and my body. My life is waxen olde with heynesne, and my yeares with mournynge. My strēth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprove amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours & they of myne owne aquauntaunce are afrayed of me: they ŷ se me in the strete, cōveye them selues for me. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: euery man abhorreth me: they haue gathered a counceyl together agaynst me, and are purposed to take a waye my life.

But my hope is in ŷ O LORDE, & I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: delyuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them ŷ persecute me. Shewe thy seruauent the light of thy countenance, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdanedly & despitefully speake agaynst the rightuous. O how greate and manifolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare ŷ? O what thinges bringest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tongues. Thanks be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greate kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his sayntes) for the LORDE preserueth the faithfull, and plenteously rewardeth he the proude doer. * Be strōge therfore & take a good herte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

STRYUE thou with them (o LORDE) that stryue with me, fight thou agaynst them that fight agaynst me. Laye honde vpon the shyld and speare, and stonde vp to helpe me. same for euer. Sela. We wayte for thy louynge kyndnesse (o God) in the myddest of thy temple. O God, acordinge vnto thy name, so is thy prayse vnto the worldes ende: thy right hōde is full of righteousnes.

“Oh let the mouēt Sion reioyse, & y daughters of Iuda be glad because of thy iudgmētes. Walke aboute Sion, go rounde aboute her, and tell hir towres. Marke well hir walles, set vp hir houses: that it maye be tolde them y come after. For this God is oure God for euer & euer, and he shal allwaie be oure gyde.

The xliij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O HEARE this, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vpon the earth.

Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one with another.

My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstōdinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherefore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles cōpaseth me rounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches. No man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agrement for him vnto God.

B “For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for euer. Yee though he lyue lōge, & se not y graue. “For it shal be sene, y soch wyse mē shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignoraunt and foolish, & leaue their goodes for other. Loke what is in their houses, it cōtinueth still: their dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuerthelesse mā abyedeth not in soch honoure, but is cōpared vnto y brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto thē.

This waie of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it with their mouth.

Sela. They lye in the hell like shepe, death shal gnawe vpon them, & the righteous shal haue dominacion of them in the mornyng by tymes: their strēgh shal consume, & hell shal be their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell, when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afayed, whan one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. “For he shal cary nothinge awaye with him when he dyeth, nether shal his pompe folowe him. Whye he lyueth, he is counted an happie man: & so lōge as he is in prosperite, mē speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light eny more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The xliij. A psalme of Asaph.

THE LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the worlde from the rysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion apareth the glorious beutie of God. Oure God shal come, and not kepe sylence: there goeth before him a consumyng fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, those y set more by the couenaunt then by eny offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his rightuousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprove the not because of thy sacrifice, thy burntofferings are allwaie before me. “I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gotes out of thy foldes. For all the beestes of the felde are myne, and thousandes of catell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the foules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the felde are in my sight. “Yf I be hongrie, I wil not tell the: for y whole worlde is myne, and all that therein is. Thynkest thou, that I wil eate the flesh of oxen, or drynke the bloude of goates? Offre vnto God prayse and thankesgeuyng, and paye thy vowes vnto the most hyest. “And call vpon me in the tyme of trouble, so wil I heare the, that thou shalt thanke me. But vnto the vngodly sayeth God: Why doest thou preach my lawes, and takest my couenaunt in thy mouth? Where as thou hatest to be reformed, and castest my wordes behynde the? Yf thou seist a thefe, thou runnest with him, and art partaker with the aduouterers. Thou lettest thy mouth speake wickednesse, & thy tonge paynteth disceate. The l. A psalme of David.

HAUE mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, ⁊ acordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaye myne offences.

Wash me well fro my wickednesse, ⁊ clense me fro my synne.^a For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight : that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges,^b and shuldest ouer come when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the truth, and hast shewed me secrete wysdome. ^cO reconcile me with Isope, and I shal be clene : wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face fro my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. ^dMake me a clene hert (o God) and renue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete fro me. O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablsh me with thy fre sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudegyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy rightuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

^eFor yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the : but thou delytest not in burntofferynges. The sacrifice of God is a troubled sprete, ^fa broken and a cōtrite hert (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be fauorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the wallēs of Ierusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of rightuousnesse,^g with the burntofferynges and oblacions : then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine altur.

The li. A psalme of David.

WHY boastest thou thy self (thou Ty-raunt) that thou canst do myschefe ? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymaginueth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vngraciousnesse more thē good, to talke of lyes more then rightuousnesse. Sela.

Thou louest to speake all wordes ^h⁊ maye do hurte, O thou false tōge. Therfore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the luyinge. Sela.

The rightuous shal se this, ⁊ feare, and laugh him to scorne. ⁱLo, this is the mā, ^j⁊ toke not God for his strēgh, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, ⁊ was mightie in his wickednesse. As for me, I am like a grene olyue tre in ^k⁊ house of God : my trust is in the tender mercy of God for euer ⁊ euer.

I wil allwaye geue thanks vnto the, for that thou hast done : and wil hope in thy name, for thy sayntes like it well.

The liij. A psalme of David.

THE foolish bodies saye in their hertes : ^lTush, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abhominable in their wickednesses : there is not one, that doth good. God loked downe from heauen vpō the children of men, to se yf there were eny that wolde vnderstonde, or seke after God. ^mBut they are all gone out of ⁿ⁊ waye, they are all become vnprofitable : there is none ^o⁊ doth good, no not one. How cā they haue vnderstandinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, ⁊ call not vpon God ? They are afeared, where no feare is : for God breaketh the bones of them that besege the : thou putteth them to confusion, for God despiseth them. Oh ^p⁊ the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out of Sion : Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Then shulde Iacob reioyse, ⁊ Israel shulde be right glad.

For thou hast delyuered me out of all my trouble, so that myne eye seyth his desyre vpō myne enemies.

The liiiij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self fro my petition. Take hede vnto me and heare me, how piteously I mourne & cōplayne. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somewhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (o LORDE) and deuyde them, ^bfor I se vnrightuousnes & strife in ^cfy cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therin, disceate and gyle go not out of hir stretes. Yf it were myne enemy that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell wil dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companion, ^cmy gyde and myne owne familier frēde. We had swete and secrete comunicacion together, and louingly walked we together in ^dfy house of God.

As for me, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueninge, mornynge and at noone daye wil I mourne and complayne: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that delyuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite for me: for they are many agaynst me. Yee euen God that endureth for euer, shal heare me, and brynge them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. Yee they laye hondes vpon soch as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. ^eO cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal norish the, and not leaue the rightuous in vnquietnesse. But as for them, thou (o God) shalt cast them downe in to the pitte of destruction. The bloudthurstie and disceatfull shal not lyue out half their daies. Neuerthelesse my trust is in the.

BE mercifull vnto me (o God) for men wil treade me downe: they are daylie fightinge & troublingme me. Myne enemies treade me daylie vnder their fete, for they be many, ^ffy proudly fight agaynst me.

Neuerthelesse, whē I am afraied, I put my trust in the. I wil comforte my self in Gods worde, yee I wil hope in God, and not feare: What can flesh then do vnto me?

They vexe me daylie in my wordes: all ^gfy they ymagin, is to do me euell. They holde altogether, & kepe them selues close: they marck my steppes, how they maye catch my soule. But in vayne, for it shal escape thē: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe soch people. Thou tellest my flittinges, thou putttest my teares in thy botell, and nombrest them. When so euer I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. Yee in God do I trust, & am not afraied: what cā man thē do vnto me? Vnto the (o God) wil I paye my vowes, vnto ^hfy wil I geue thākes & prayse. The lviij. A psalme of Dauid.

YF youre myndes be vpon rightousnesse in dede, then iudge the thinge that is right, o ye sonnes of men. But ye ymagin myschefe in youre hertes, and youre hondes deale with wickednesse. O come hither and beholde the workes of God, which is so wonderfull in his doinges amonge the children of men. He turned the see in to drye lōde,^d so that they wente thorow the water on fote: therfore wil we reioyse in him. He ruleth with his power for euer, his eyes beholde the people: the rennagates shal not be able to exalte them selues. Sela. O magnifie oure God (ye people) make þy voyce off his prayse to be herde. Which holdeth oure soule in life, and suffreth not oure fete to slippe. For thou (o God) 37 hast proued vs, thou hast tried vs like as syluer is tried. Thou hast brought vs in to captiuyte, and layed trouble vpon oure loynes. Thou hast suffred men to ryde ouer oure heades, we wēte thorow fyre and water,^e butt thou hast brought vs out, and refreshed vs.

Therefore will I go in to thy house with brēt offerings, to paye the my vowes,^f which I promised with my lippes, and spake with my mouth, when I was in trouble. I wil offre vnto the fatte brentsacrifices with the smoke of rāmes, I will offre bullockes and goates. Sela. O come hither and herkē (all ye that feare God) I wil tell you, what he hath done for my soule. I called vnto hī with my mouth and gaue him prayes with my tūge. (Yff I enclyne vnto wickednes with my herte, þy LORDE wil not heare me.) Therefore God hath herde me, ⁊ considered the voyce off my prayer. Prayed be God, which hath not cast out my prayer, ner turned his mercy fro me.

LET God aryse,^a so shal his enemies be scattered, and they that hate him, shal fle before him. Like as the smoke vanisheth, so shalt thou dryue them awaye: and like as waxe melteth at the fyre, so shall the vngodly perish at the presence off God.

But the righteous shal be glad & reioyse before God, they shalbe mery & ioyful. Oh synge vnto God, synge prayses vnto his name: magnifie him ſ̄ rydeth aboute the heauēs (whose name is ſ̄ LORDE) & reioyse before hī.

inge so longe vpon my God. "They ſ hate me without a cause, are mo then the hayres of my heade: they that are myne enemies & wolde destroye me giltlesse, are mightie: I am fayne to paye the thinges ſ I neuer toke. God, thou knowest my synplesnesse, and my fautes are not hyd from the. Let not them that trust in the (o LORDE God of hostes) be ashamed for my cause: let not those ſ seke the, be confounded thorow me, o God of 13 Israel. And why? for thy sake do I suffre reprofe, shame couereth my face. I am become a straunger vnto my brethren, and an aleaunt vnto my mothers children. ^a For the zeale of thine house hath euen eaten me, and the rebukes of them that rebuked the, is fallen vpon me. I wepte and chastened my self with fasting, and that was turned to my reprofe. I put on a sackecloth, and therefore they iested vpon me. They that satt in the gate, spake agaynst me, and the dronckardes made songes vpon me. But LORDE, I made my prayer vnto the in an acceptable tyme: Heare me (o God) with thy greates mercy & sure helpe.
C Take me out of the myre, ſ I syncke not: Oh let me be deluyered fro the ſ hate me, & out of ſ depe waters. Lest ſ water floude drowne me, that the depe swalowe me not vp, & ſ the pitte shut not hir mouth vpon me. Heare me (o LORDE) for thy louynge kyndnesse is comfortable: turne the vnto me accordinge vnto thy greates mercy. Hyde not thy face from thy seruait, for I am in trouble: O haist ſ to helpe me. Drawe nye vnto my soule, and saue it: O deluyer me because of myne enemies. Thou knowest my reprofe, my shame & my dishonoure: my aduersaries are all in thy sight. The rebuke breaketh my hert, & maketh me heuy: ſ I loke for some to haue pitie vpon me, but there is no man: & for some to cōferte me, but I fynde none.
D ^a They gaue me gall to eate, & whē I was thurstie, they gaue me vyneger to drynke. Let their table be made a snare to take them selues withall, an occasion to fall & a rewarde vnto them. Let their eyes be blynded, that they se not: & euer bowe downe their backes.
 Poure out thy indignacion vpon them, & let thy wrothfull displeasure take holde of them. Let their habitation be voyde, & no man to dwel in their tentes. For they persecute him whom thou hast smytten, & besyde thy woundes they haue geuen him moo. Let them fall fro one wickednesse to another, & not come in to thy rightuousnesse. Let the be wypped out of ſ boke of the lyuinge,^a & not be written amonge the rightuous. As for me, I am poore & in heuynesse, let thy helpe defende me, o God. That I maye prayse ſ name of God with a songe, & magnifie it with thankesgeuyng. This shal please the LORDE better then a bullocke, that hath hornes & hoffs. O conside this & be glad (ye that be in aduersite) seke after God, & youre soule shal lyue.

For the LORDE heareth the poore, & despyseth not his presoners. Let heauen & earth praise him, the see & all that moueth therein. For God wil saue Sion, & buylde the cities of Iuda, that men maye dwell there, & haue the in possession. The sede of his seruantes shal inheret it, & they that loue his name, shal dwell therein.

The lxx. A psalme of David.

HAIST the (o God) to deluyer me,^a & to helpe me, o LORDE. Let the be shamed & confounded that seke after my soule: let them be turned backwarde & put to confucio, that wyshe me euell. Let them soone be brought to shame, ſ crie ouer me: there there.

But let all those that seke the, be ioyfull & glad in the: and let all soch as delyte in thy sauynge health, saye alwaye: ſ LORDE be prayed. As for me, I am poore & in misery, haist the God for to helpe me. Thou art my helpe, my redemer & my God: oh make no longe tarienge.

inges had wel nye slifte. And why? I was greued at þy wicked,^a to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they played like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puffed vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrighteousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therefore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auantage. ^bTush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowlege in the most hiest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospeire in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then cense my hert in vayne (thought I) ^c& wash my hondes in innocency? Wherefore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, & be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wete in to þy Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set the in a slippery place, ^dthat thou maiest cast the downe headlynges & destroye the. O how sodenly do they consume, perish, & come to a fearfull ende? ^eYee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, & it wente euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignoraunt, and as it were a beest before the. Neuerthelesse, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou ledest me with thy coucel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen? there is nothinge vpon earth, that I desyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. ^fFor lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, thou destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the LORDE God, and to speake of all thy workes.

The lxxij. A psalme of Asaph

O GOD, wherfore doest thou cast vs so cleane awaye? why is thy wrath so hote agaynst þy shepe of thy pasture? O thinke vpon thy congregacion, whom thou hast purchased fro the begynnyng: the staff of thine inheritance, whom thou hast redeemed, euen this hill of Sion wherin thou dwellest. Treade vpon them with thy fete, & cast them downe to the grounde, for the enemye hath destroyed alltogether in the Sactuary. Thy aduersaries roare in thy houses, & set vp their banners for tokens. Men maye se the axes glister aboue, like as those that hewe in the wod. They cutt downe ^gall the sylinge worke of þy Sactuary with bylles & axes. They haue set fyre vpon thy Sactuary, they haue defiled þy dwellinge place of thy name, euē vnto the groude. Yee they saye in their hertes: Let vs spoyle the all together, thus haue they brent vp all the houses of God in the londe. We se oure tokens nomore, there is not one prophet more, not one that vnderstondeh enymore. Oh God, how lōge shal the aduersary do this dishonour? how lōge shal the enemye blaspheme thy name? for euer? Why withdrawest thou thine honde? why pluckest thou not thy right hōde out of thy bosome, to consume thine enemies? But God is my kynge of olde, the helpe that is done vpon earth he doth it himself. Thou deuydest þy see thorow thy power, ^hthou breakest the heades of the dragōs in the waters.

ⁱThou smyttest the heades of Lewiathan in peces, & geuest him to be meate for the people in the wilderness. Thou dyggest vp welles & brokes, thou dryest vp mightie waters. In the tyme of my trouble I sought the LORDE, I helde vp my hondes vnto him in the night season, for my soule refused all other comforte. When I was in heynesesse, I thought vpō God: whē my hert was vexed, then dyd I speake.

Sela. Thou heldest myne eyes wakyng, I was so feble, that I coude not speake. Then remembered I the tymes of olde, & the yeares that were past. I called to remembraunce my songe in the night, I commoned with myne owne herte, and sought out my sprete. Wil the LORDE cast out for euer?

Wil he be nomore intreated? Is his mercy cleane gone? Is his promyse come vtterly to an ende for euermore? Hath the LORDE forgotten to be gracious? Or, hath he shut vp his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? the right honde of the most hiest can chaunge all.

HEARE my lawe (o my people) encline youre eares vnto \hat{y} wordes of my mouth. ^aI wil open my mouth in parables, and speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and soch as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we shulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. To the intent \hat{y} when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, τ not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his comāndementes. ^cAnd not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion, a generacion that set not their herte a right, and whose sprete was not true towarde

God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beyng harnesssed and carienge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of bat-tayll. They kepte not the couenāut of God, τ wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgot what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egipte, euen in the felde of Zoan. ^dHe deuyded the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. ^eIn the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaued the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greates deapth. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hyest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and requyred meate for their lust. ^fFor they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wyldernes, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gushed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouide flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: so the fyre was kyndled in Iacob, and heuy displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he comānded the cloudes aboue, and opened the dores of heauen. ^gHe rayned downe Manna vpō them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. ^hHe made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of \hat{y} see. He let it fall amōge their tētes rōude aboute their habitacios. So they ate τ were fylled, for he gaue them their owne desyre. ⁱThey were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whyle \hat{y} meate was yet in their mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vpō thē, slewe \hat{y} welthiest of thē, τ smote downe \hat{y} chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, ^kand beleued not his wōderous workes. Therfore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeares were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them early vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redemer. Neuerthesse, they dyd but flater him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenant. But he was so mercifull, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. ^lFor he considered \hat{y} they were but flesh: euen a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft haue they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme haue they prouoked him in the deserte? They turned backe τ tempted God, and moued the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hāde, in $\frac{1}{2}$ daye when he delyuered them from the hande of $\frac{1}{2}$ enemye. How he had wrought his miracles in Egipte, and his wōders in the londe of Zoan. How he turned their waters in to bloude, so that they might not drynke of the ryuers.^a How he sent lyse amonge them, to eate them vp, and frogges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catirpiller, and their labour vnto the greshopper. ^bHow he bett downe their vynyardes with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their cattell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thōder boltes. How he sent vpon them $\frac{1}{2}$ furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euel angels. ^cWhen he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciō, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their cattell ouer to the pestilence. ^dWhen he smote all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in $\frac{1}{2}$ dwellings of Ham.

But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wyl-dernesse like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and ouerwhelmed their enemies with the see. He caried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuary: euen in to this hill, which he purchased with his right hande. ^eHe dyd cast out the Heithen before them, caused their londe to be deuoyd amonge them for an heretage, and made $\frac{1}{2}$ tribes of Israel to dwell in their tētes. For all this they tempted and displeased the most hye God, and kepte not his couenaunt. But turned their backs and fell awaye like their forefathers, startinge asyde like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their hie places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel. ^fSo that he forsoke the tabernacle in Silo, euen his habitacion wherin he dwelt amonge men. ^gHe delyuered their power in to captiuyte, and their glory in to the enemies hōde. He gaue his people ouer in to the swerde, for he was wroth with his heretage.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydes were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giaunte refreshed with wyne. ^hHe smote his enemies in $\frac{1}{2}$ hynder partes, and put them to a perpetuall shame. He refused the tabernacle of Ioseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Neuerthelesse, he chose $\frac{1}{2}$ trybe of Iuda, euē the hill of Sion which he loued. ⁱAnd there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed $\frac{1}{2}$ foundation of it like $\frac{1}{2}$ grounde, that it might perpetually endure. ^jHe chose Dauid also his seruaut, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was followinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Iacob his people, and Israel his enheritaunce. So he fed them with a faithfull and true hert, and ruled them with all $\frac{1}{2}$ diligence of his power.

GOD, $\frac{1}{2}$ Heithen are fallen in to thine heretage: ^kthy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Ierusalem an heape of stones. ^lThe deed bodies of thy seruantes haue they geuen vnto $\frac{1}{2}$ foules of the ayre to be deuoured, and the flesh of thy sayntes vnto $\frac{1}{2}$ beestes of the londe. Their bloude haue they shed like water on euery syde of Ierusalem, and there was no mā to burie them. ^mWe are become an open shame vnto oure enemies, a very scorne and derision vnto them that are rounde aboute vs.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou be angrie? shal thy gelousy burne like fyre for euer? Poure out thy indignacion vpon the Heithen that knowe the not, ⁿand vpon the kyngdomes that call not vpon thy name.

For they haue deuoured Iacob, and layed waiste his dwellinge place. ^oO remēbre not oure olde synnes, but haue mercy vpon vs (that soone) for we are come to greate mysery.

HEARE o thou shepherde of Israel, thou þ̄ ledest Iacob like a flocke of shepe:
shewe thy self, thou þ̄ syttest vpō þ̄ Cherubins.
Before Ephraim, Bē Iamin & Manasses:
stere vp thy power & come helpe vs. Turne vs agayne (o God) shewe the light of thy cōtēnaūce & we shalbe whole. O LORDE
God of hoostes, how lōge wilt thou be angrie ouer the prayer of thy people? Thou hast fed thē with the bred of teares,^a yee thou hast geuen thē plētousnes of teares to drynke.
Thou hast made vs a very strife vnto oure neighbours, and oure enemies laugh vs to scorne.

Turne vs agayne (thou God of hoostes) shewe the light of thy cōtēnaūce, & we shalbe whole. Thou hast brought a vynyarde out of Egipte, thou didest cast out þ̄ Heithē, & plāte it. Thou maydest rowme for it, & caused it to take rote, so þ̄ it fylled the lōde. The hilles were couered with the shadowe of it, & so were the stronge Cedre trees with the bowes therof. She stretched out hir braūches vnto the see, & hir bowes vnto the water: Why hast thou then broken downe hir hedge, that all they which go by, plucke of hir grapes?

The wilde bore out of the wod hath wrutt
it vp, & the beestes of the felde haue deuoured
it. Turne þ̄ agayne (thou God of hoostes) loke downe from heauen, beholde & viset this vynyarde. Manteyne it, that thy right hōde hath plāted, & the sonne whom thou maydest so moch of for thy self.^a For why? it is brēt with fyre, & lyeth waist: o let thē perishe at the rebuke of thy wrath.

Let thy honde be vpon the man of thy right honde, & vpon the man whō thou maydest worshipec any other God. I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the lōde of Egipte: opē thy mouth wyde, & I shal fyll

it. But my people wolde not heare my gaue thē vp vnto their owne hertes lust, & let thē folowe their owne ymaginacions. O þ̄ my people wolde obeye me, for yf Israel wolde walke in my wayes, I shulde soone put

O LORDE God my Sauoure, I crie ^a daye & night before the: Oh let my prayer entre in to thy presence, encline thine eare vnto my callynge. For my soule is full of trouble, & my life draweth nye vnto hell. I am cōtēd as one of thē that go downe vnto the pytte, I am euē as a mā that hath no strēth. The lxxxij. Psalmc.

A prayer of Moses the man of God.

LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the worlde were made, thou art God from euerlastinge and worlde with out ende. Thou turnest man to destruccion, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. ^b For a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

As soone as thou scatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye sodenly like the grasse. ^c In the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and wythered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are afrayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure miszdedes before the, and oure secrete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all oure dayes are gone, we brynge oure yeares to an ende, as it were a tayle that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but laboure and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fearfull & terrible displeasure? ^d O teach vs to nombre oure dayes, that we maye applie ^e oure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (o LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruantes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Comforte vs agayne, now after the tyme that thou hast plagued vs, and for the yeares wherin we haue suffred aduersite.

WHO so dwelleth vnder y defence of the most hiest, & abydeth vnder y shadowe of y almightie: He shal saye vnto y LORDE: o my hope, & my stronge holde, my God, in whō I wil trust. For he shal deliuer the frō the snare of the hunter, & frō the noysome pestilence. He shal couer the vnder his wynges, that thou mayest be safe vnder his fethers: his faithfulness and trueth shal be thy shyld and buckler. So y thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night, ner for arowe that flyeth by daye.

An vnwyse man wil not knowe this, & a foole wil not vnderstode it. ^b That the vngodly are grene as the grasse, and that all the workes of wickednes do florish, to be destroyed for euer. But thou LORDE o most hiest, abydest worlde without ende.

B For lo, thy enemies (o LORDE) lo, thy enemies shal perishe, and all the workers of wickednes shalbe scatred abrode. ^c But my horne shalbe exalted like the horne of an Vnicorne, & shal be anoynted with fresh oyle. That thou mayest geue him pacience in tyme of aduersite, vntill the pytte be dygged vp for the vngodly. For the LORDE wil not fayle his people, neither wil he forsake his inheritance. Yf the LORDE had not helped me, my soule had almost bene put to sylence.

the LORDE endureth for euer, and the LORDE reioyseth in his workes. The earth trebleth at the lōke of him, f he doth but touch f hilles and they smoke. I will synge vnto the LORDE as long as I lye, I wil prayse my God whyle I haue my beinge. O that my wordes might please him, for my ioye is in the LORDE. As for synners, they shal be cōsumed out of the earth, and the vngodly shal come to an ende: g but prayse thou the LORDE, o my soule. Halleluya.

The ciiiij. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, and a call vpon his name: a tell the people what thinges he hath done. O let youre songes be of him: prayse him, and let youre talkynge be of all his wonderous workes. Geue his holy name a good reporte, let their hertes reioyse that seke the LORDE.

Seke the LORDE, and his strength, seke his face euermore. Remembre the maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders and the iudgmentes of his mouth. O ye sede of Abraham his seruauant, ye children of Iacob his chosen. He is the LORDE oure God, b whose punyshmentes are thorow out all the worlde. He is allwaye myndfull of his couenauant, and promyse that he made to a thousande generacions.

He made him lorde of his house, t ruler of all his substaunce. That he might enfourme his prynces after his wil, and teach his Senatours wysdome. b Israel also came in to Egipte, and Iacob was a straunger in the lode of Ham.

d But he increased his people exceedingly, and made them stronger then their enemies.

a Then sent he Moses his seruaut, and Aaron whom he had chosen. These dyd his tokens amoge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. "He sent darcknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde.

f He turned their waters in to bloude, and slewe their fishe. Their londe brought forth frogges, e yee euen in their kynges chambers. He spake the worde, t their came all maner of flies t lise in all their quarters. He gaue them hale stones for rayne, and flammes of fyre in their lode. He smote their vynyards t fige trees, and destroyed the trees that were in their coastes. He spake y worde, h and their came greshoppers t catirpillers innumerable. These ate vp all the grasse in their lode, and deuoured the frutes of their groilde.

e He smote all y first borne in their lode, i euen the chefe of all their substaunce. He brought them forth with syluer t golde, there was not one feble personne amoge their trybes. Egipte was glad of their departinge, for they were afraied of the.

The cii. Psalmc. Halleluya.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. a Who can expresse y noble actes of the LORDE, or shewe forth all his prayse? Blessed are they that allwaye kepe iudgment, and do rightuousnes. Remembre vs (o LORDE) accordinge to the fauoure that thou bearest vnto thy people: o vyset vs with thy sauinge health. That we might se the pleasure of thy chosen, that we might reioyse in the gladnesse of thy people, and geue thanks with thine enheritaunce. e We haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Oure fathers regarded not thy wonders in Egipte, they kepte not thy greate goodness in remembrance: but were dishobediēt at the see, euē at the reed see. Neuertheles, he helped the for his names sake, that he might make his power to be knowne. He rebuked the reed see, and it was dried vp: f so he led the thorow the depe as in a wilderness. Thus he saued them from the honde of the hater, t delyuered them from the honde of the enemye.

As for those y troubled them, the waters ouerwhelmed the, there was not one of the left. g Then beleued they in his worde, and songe prayse vnto him. But within a while they forgat his workes, t wolde not abyde his counsell. i A lust came vpō them in the wilderness, so that they tempted God in the deserte. Yet he gaue them their desyre, and sent the ynough at their willes. They angered Moses in the tētes, i and Aaron the saynte of the LORDE. So the earth opened t swallowed vp Dathan, and couered the congregaciō of Abiram. The fyre was kyndled in their company, the flame brent vp the vngodly. m They made a calfe in Horeb, and worshipped the moltē ymage. Thus they turned his glory in to the similitude of a calfe, y eateth haye. They forgat God their Sauoure, which had done so greate thinges in Egipte. Yee they thought scorne of y^e pleasant londe, and gaue no credence vnto his worde.

But murmured in their tentes, and herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE.

Then lift he vp his honde agaynst them, to ouerthrowe them in the wildernes. To cast out their sede amonge the nacions, and to scatter them in the londes. They ioyned them selues vnto Baal Peor, and ate the offeringes of the deed. Thus they prouoked him vnto anger with their owne inuēcions, and the plage was greate amonge them.

Then stode vp Phineas and executed iustice, & so the plage ceased. And that was counted vnto him for rightuousnesse, amonge all posterites for euermore. They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that Moses was punyshed for their sakes. Because they prouoked his sprete, and he tolde thē planely with his lippes. Nether destroyed they the Heithen, as the LORDE commaunded them. But were mengled amonge the Heithen, and lerned their workes.

In so moch that they worshipped their ymages, which turned to their owne decaye.

Yee they offred their sonnes and their daughters vnto deuels. And shed the innocent bloude of their sonnes and of their daughters, whom they offred vnto the ymages of Canaan, so that the londe was defyled with bloude. Thus were they stayned with their owne workes, and wente a whoringe with their owne inuēcions. Therefore was the wrath of the LORDE kyndled agaynst his people, in so moch that he abhorred his owne enheritaunce. And gaue them ouer in to the honde of the Heithē, and they that hated them, were lordes ouer them. Their enemies oppressed thē, and had them in subieccion. Many a tyme dyd he deliyuer them, but they prouoked him with their owne inuēcions, and were brought downe for their wickednesse. Neuerthelesse whē he sawe their aduersite, he herde their complainyte. He thought vpō his couenaunt, and pitied thē, acordinge vnto the multitude of his mercies. Yee he made all those y^e had led them awaye captiue, to pitie them. Deliyuer vs (o LORDE oure God) & gather vs from amōge the Heithen: that we maye geue thanks to thy holy name, & make

The cxi. Psalme.

GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let them geue thākes whom the LORDE hath redemed, & deliyuered from the hande of the enemye. And gathered thē out of the londes, frō the east, frō the west, frō the north & from the south.

They wente astraye in the wilderness in an vntroden waye, & founde no cite to dwell in. Hongrie & thirstie, & their soule faynted in thē. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, & he deliyuered thē from their distresse. He led thē forth by y^e right waie, y^e they might go to y^e cite where they dwelt.

For the greatnesse of thy mercy is higher then the heauens, and thy faithfulness reacheth vnto the cloudes. Set vp thy self (o God) aboute the heauē, & thy glory aboute all the earth. That thy beloued maye be deluyered: helpe then with thy right hande, & heare me. God hath spoken in his Sanctuary (which thinge reioyseth me.) I will deuoyde Sichem, and mete out the valley of Suchoth. Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strēth of my heade, Iuda is my captaine. Moab is my wash pottle, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who wil lede me in to the stronge cite? Who wil brynge me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it (o God) which hast cast vs out: thou God, y^e wentest not forth with oure hoostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for vayne is the helpe of man. from death, myne eyes from teares, and my fete from fallinge. I wil walke before \hat{y} LORDE, in the londe of the lyuyng.

The xrb. Psalme.

This psalme do the Hebrues ioyne vnto it that goeth before, and it is with them the cxvi. psalme.

I BELEUED, and therefore haue I spokē, but I was sore troubled. I sayde in my haist: All men are liers.

What rewarde shal I geue vnto \hat{y} LORDE, for all the benefites \hat{y} he hath done vnto me? I wil receaue the cuppe of saluaciō, and call vpon the name of the LORDE.

I wil paye my vowes in the presence of all his people, right deare in the sight of \hat{y} LORDE is the death of his sayntes. O LORDE, I am thy seruauit, I am thy seruauant, and the sonne of thy handmayden, thou hast broken my bondes in sonder. I wil offre the sacrifice of thankes geuyng, and wil call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes vnto the LORDE in the sight of all his people, in the courtes of the LORDES house, euē in the myddest of the, o Ierusalem. Halleluya.

The xrbj. Psalme.

O PRAYSE the LORDE all ye Gentiles, laude him all ye people. For his mercifull kyndnes is euer more and more towarde vs, and the trueth of the LORDE endureth for euer. Halleluya.

The xrbij. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let Israel now confesse, \hat{y} his mercy endureth for euer. Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. Yee let thē now that feare the LORDE, confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. I called vpon the LORDE in trouble, and the LORDE herde me at large. The LORDE is my helper, I wil not feare what man doeth vnto me. The LORDE is my helper, and I shal se my desyre vpon myne enemies. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidence in man. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidēce in prynces. All Heithen compassed me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye thē.

They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them.

They came aboute me like bees, and were as hote as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them.

They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helpe. The LORDE is my strēgth, and my songe, and is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye and myrth is in the dwellinges of \hat{y} rightuous, for \hat{y} right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory.

The right hande of the LORDE hath the preemynence, the right hāde of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE.

The LORDE hath chastened and correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death.

Open me the gates of rightuousnes, \hat{y} I maye go in there thorow, and geue thākes vnto the LORDE. This is the dore of the LORDE, the rightuous shall entre in thorow it.

I thanke the, \hat{y} thou hast herde me, and art become my saluaciō. The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doinge, and it is maruelous in oure eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, let vs reioyse and be glad in it. Helpe now o LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosperite.

Blessed be he that cōmeth in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, ye that be of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, and hath shewed vs light: O garnish the solempne feast with grene braunches, euē vnto the hornes of \hat{y} aluter. Thou art my God, and I wil thanke the: thou art my God, and I wil prayse the. O geue thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

The xrbij. Psalme.

ALEPH.

BLESSED are those \hat{y} be vndeified in the waye: which walke in the lawe of \hat{y} LORDE. Blessed are they that kepe his testimonies, and seke him with their whole herte.

I wil kepe thy statutes, o forsake me not vtterly.

BETH.

Where withall shall a yonge man clense his waye? Euen by rulinge himself after thy worde. With my whole herte do I seke ŷ. O let me not go wronge out of thy cōmaundēmētes. Thy wordes haue I hyd within my herte, ŷ I shulde not synne agaynst the.

Praised be thou O LORDE, O teach me thy statutes. With my lippes wil I be tellynge out all the iudgmentes of thy mouth.

HETH

H Thou art my porcion (o LORDE) I am purposed to kepe thy lawe. ^a I make myne humble petition in thy presence with my whole herte, o be mercifull vnto me accordinge vnto thy worde. I call myne owne wayes to remembraunce, and turne my fete in to thy testimonies. I make haist, and prolonge not the tyme, to kepe thy commaundemētes. The congregacions of the vngodly haue robbed me, but I forget not thy lawe. ^b At mydnight stonde I vp, to geue thākes vnto the, for the iudgements of thy rightuousnesse.

I am a companion of all them that feare the,^c and kepe thy commaundementes.

The earth (o LORDE) is full of thy mercy, O teach me thy statutes.

THETH.

T O LORDE, thou hast dealt frendly with thy seruaunt, accordinge vnto thy worde.

O lerne me kyndnesse, nourtoure & knowlege, for I beleue thy commaundementes.

Before I was troubled, I wente wronge, but now I kepe thy worde. Thou art good and frendly,^d O teach me thy statutes.

The proude ymagin lyes vpon me, but I kepe thy commaundemētes with my whole herte. Their herte is as fat as brawne, but my delite is in thy lawe. It is good for me that I haue bene in trouble, that I maye lerne thy statutes. The lawe of thy mouth is dearer vnto me, thē thousandes of golde & syluer.

IOD.

I Thy hādes haue made me^e and fashioned me, O geue me vnderstondinge, that I maye lerne thy commaundementes. They that feare the, wil be glad when they se me, because I put my trust in thy worde. I knowe (o LORDE) ^f thy iudgements are right, and ^g thou of very faithfulnessse hast caused me be troubled. O let thy mercifull kyndnesse be my comforte, accordinge to the promyse that thou hast made vnto thy seruaunt. O let thy lounge mercies come vnto me, that I maye lyue, for thy lawe is my delyte. For I am become like a botell in ^h smoke, yet do not I forget thy statutes. ⁱ How many are the dayes of thy seruaunt? Whē wilt thou be auenged of my aduersaries? ^k The proude haue dygged pittes for me, which are not after thy lawe.

All thy commaundemētes are true, they persecute me falsly, O be thou my helpe.

They haue almost made an ende of me vpon earth, but I forsake not thy commaundemētes. O quykē me after thy louinge kyndnes, & so shall I kepe the testimonies of thy mouth.

LAMED.

L O LORDE, thy worde endureth for euer in heauē. ^l Thy treuth also remaineth from one generacion to another: thou hast layed the foundation of the earth, and it abydeth.

They cōtinue this daye accordinge to thy ordinaunce, for all thinges serue the. ^m Yf my delyte were not in thy lawe, I shulde perishe in my trouble. I wil neuer forget thy cōmaundementes, for with thē thou quyenest me. I am thine, oh helpe me, for I seke thy commaundementes. The vngodly laye wayte for me to destroye me, but I conside thy testimonies. I se that all thinges come to an ende, but thy commaundemēt is exceedinge brode.

MEM.

M O what a loue haue I vnto thy lawe? all the daye longe is my talkynge of it. Thou thorow thy commaundement hast made me wyser thē myne enemies, for it is euer by me.

PE.

Thy testimonies are wonderfull, therefore doth my soule kepe them. ^b When thy worde goeth forth, it geueth light and vnderstōdinge, euē vnto babes. I opē my mouth & drawe in my breth, for I desyre thy commaundemētes. O lōke thou vpon me, and be mercifull, as thou vvest to do vnto those ^ŷ loue thy name. Ordre my goinges after thy worde, that no wickednesse raigne in me. O delyuer me from the wrōgeous dealinges of mē, and so shal I kepe thy commaundemētes. Shewe the light of thy countenance vnto thy seruāut, and lerne me thy statutes. Myne eyes gusshe out with water, because men kepe not thy lawe.

ZADI.

Rightuous art thou (o LORDE) & true is thy iudgmēt. The testimonies that thou hast commaunded, are exceedinge rightuous and true. ^c My zeale hath euen consumed me, because myne enemies haue forgotten thy wordes. Thy worde is tried to the vtmost, & thy seruāunte loueth it. I am small and of no reputaciō, yet do not I forget thy cōmaundementes. Thy rightuousnesse is an euerlastinge rightuousnes, and thy lawe is true. Trouble and heuynesse haue takē holde vpō me, yet is my delite in thy commaundementes. The rightuousnes of thy testimonies is euerlastinge, o graunte me vnderstōdinge, and I shal lyue.

COPH.

I call with my whole herte, heare me (o LORDE) I wil kepe thy statutes. Yee euen vpō the do I call, helpe me, and I shal kepe thy testimonies. Early in ^ŷ mornynge do I crie vnto the, for in thy worde is my trust. Myne eyes preuēte ^ŷ night watches, ^ŷ I might be occupied in thy wordes. Hear me my voyce (o LORDE) acordige vnto thy louynge kyndnesse, quykē me acordige as thou art wōt. They drawe nye ^ŷ of malice persecute me, & are farre frō thy lawe. Thy wife shalbe as a frutefull vyne vpon the wallis of thy house. Thy children like the olyue branchs rōde aboute thy table. Lo, thus shal ^h mā be blessed, ^h feareth the LORDE. ^bThe LORDE shal so blesse the out of Zion, that thou shalt se Ierusalē in prosperite all thy life longe. Yee that thou shalt se thy childers childrē, & peace vpō Israel.

The cxxviii. Psalme.

MANY a tyme haue they fought agaynst ^a me fro my youth vp (maye Israel now saie). Yee many a tyme haue they fought agaist me fro my youth vp, but they haue not ouercome me. ^bThe plowers plowed vpō my backe, & made lōge forowes. But the righteous LORDE hath hewen ^h yocke of ^h vngodly in peces. Let them be confounded & turned backwarde, as many as haue euell will at Zion. ^cLet thē be euē as the hays vpon the house toppes, which wythereth afore it be pluckte vp.

The cxxij. Psalme.

A OUT of the depe call I vnto the (o LORDE) LORDE heare my voyce. Oh let thine eares conside well the voyce of my complainte. ^a Yf thou (LORDE) wilt be extreme to marcke what is done amysse, Oh LORDE, who maye abyde it? But there is mercy with the, that thou mayest be feared. I loke for the LORDE, my soule doth wayte for him, and in his worde is my trust. My soule doth patiently abyde the LORDE, frō the one mornynge to the other. Let Israel trust in the LORDE, for with the LORDE there is mercy and plenteous redemption. ^b And he shal redeme Israel from all his synnes.

Yee they shal synge in the wayes of the LORDE, that greate is the glory of the LORDE. “For though the LORDE be hye, yet hath he respecte vnto ſy lowly: as for ſy proude, he beholdeth him afarre off. Though I walke i ſy myddest of trouble, yet shalt thou refresh me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hāde vpō the furiousnes of myne enemies, ⁊ thy right hande shal saue me. The LORDE shal make good for me, yee thy mercy (o LORDE) endureth for euer: “despyse not then the worke of thine owne handes.

The cxxvij. A psalme of Dauid.

O LORDE, thou searchest me out, and knowest me. Thou knowest my downe syttinge ⁊ my vprisynge, thou vnderstodest my thoughtes afarre of. Thou art aboute my path ⁊ aboute my bedd, ⁊ spyest out all my wayes. For lo, there is not a worde i my tōge, but thou (o LORDE) knowest it altogether. Thou hast fashioned me behinde ⁊ before, ⁊ layed thine hōde vpon me. Soch knowlege is to wonderfull ⁊ excellēt for me, I can not attayne vnto it. Whither shal I go then from thy sprete? “Or, whither shal I fle from thy presence? “Yf I clymme vp in to heauen, thou art there: yf I go downe to hell, thou art there also. Yf I take the wynges of the mornynge, ⁊ remayne in the vttemost parte of the see: Euen there also shal thy honde lede me, and thy right hande shal holde me. Yf I saye: peradventure the darcknesse shal couer me, then shal my night be turned to daye. Yee the darcknesse is no darcknesse with the, but the night is as cleare as the daye, the darcknesse ⁊ light are both alike. For my reynes are thyne, thou hast couered me in my mothers wombe. The cxli. A psalme of David.

ICRIE vnto the LORDE with my voyce, yee eue vnto the LORDE do I make my supplicacion. I poure out my complayne before him, and shewe him of my trouble. When my sprete is in heuynesse, for thou knowest my path: in the waye where in I walke, haue they preuely layed a snare for me. I loke vpon my right honde & se, there is no man that wil knowe me. I haue no place to fle vnto, no man careth for my soule. Therefore do I crie vnto the (o LORDE) and saye: thou art my hope and my porcion, in the londe of the luyngge. Cōsidre my complaynte, for I am brought very lowe. Oh delyuer me fro my persecuters, for they are to stronge for me: Brynge my soule out of prison, that I maye geue thakes vnto thy name: which thinge yf thou wilt graunte me, then shal the rightuous resorte vnto my cōpany.

The cxliij. A psalme of David.

HEARE my prayer (o LORDE) conside my desyre: answer me for thy treuth & rightuousnesse sake.^e And entre not in to iudgment with thy seruaut, for in thy sight shal no man luyngge be iustified.^f For the enemie persecuteth my soule, he smyteth my life downe to the grounde, he layeth me in the darknesse, as the deed men of the worlde. Therefore is my sprete vexed within me, and my herte within me is desolate. Yet do I remēbre the tymes past,^g I muse vpō all thy workes, yee I exercise my self in the workes of thy hondes. [†]I stretch forth my hondes vnto the, my soule crieth vnto the out of the thyrstie londe. Sela. Heare me (o LORDE): and that soone, for my sprete waxeth faynte: hyde not thy face fro me, lest I be like vnto thē that go downe in to the graue. Oh let me heare thy louynge kyndnesse by tymes in the mornynge, for in the is my trust: shewe thou me the waye that I shulde walke in, for I lift vp my soule vnto the. Delyuer me (o LORDE) fro myne enemies, for I resorte vnto the.

Sende forth the lightenyng τ scatter thē, shute out thine arrowes and consume them. Sende downe thine hande from aboue, delyuer me and take me out of \S greate waters, from the hande of straunge childrē. Whose mouth talketh of vanite, τ their right hāde is a right hande of falsede. That I maye synge a new songe vnto the (o God) τ synge prayes vnto the vpon a tenstringed lute, Thou that geuest victory vnto kynges, and hast delyuered Dauid thy seruaut from the parell of the swerde. Saue me and delyuer me from the honde of straunge childrē, whose mouth talketh of vanite, and their right hande is a right hande of falsede. That oure sonnes maye growe vp as the yōge plantes,^a and that oure daughters maye be as the polished corners of the temple. That oure garners maye be full and plenteous with all maner of stoare: that oure shepe maye brynge forth thousandes and hundreth thousandes in oure villages. That oure oxen maye be stronge to laboure, that there be no myschaunce, no decaye, and no complayninge in oure stretes.

Happie are the people that be in such a case: yee blessed are the people, which haue the LORDE for their God.^b

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

I WIL magnifie the (o my God τ kyng) I wil praye thy name for euer τ euer. Every daye wil I geue thanks vnto the, and praye thy name for euer and euer. Greate is the LORDE, τ maruelous worthy to be prayسد, there is no ende of his greatnesse. One generacion shal praye thy workes vnto another, and declare thy power. As for me I wil be talkige of thy worshippe, thy glory, thy prayse and woderous workes.

So that men shal speake of the might of thy maruelous actes, and tell of thy greatnes.

The memoriall of thy abundaunt kyndnes shal be shewed, and mē shal synge of thy righteousness. The LORDE is gracious and mercifull, longe sufferyng τ of greate goodnesse. The LORDE is lounye vnto euery man, and his mercy is ouer all his workes.

All thy workes prayse the (o LORDE) and thy sayntes geue thanks vnto the. They shewe the glory of thy kyngdome, and talke of thy power. That thy power, thy glory

τ mightynesse of thy kyngdome might be knowne vnto men. Thy kyngdome is an euerlasting kyngdome, τ thy dominion endureth thorow out all ages. The LORDE vpholdeth all such as shulde fall, and lifeth vp all those that be downe. The eyes of all wayte vpon the, and thou geuest them their meate in due season. Thou openest thine hāde, and fyllest all thinges lyuynge with plenteousnesse. The LORDE is righteous in all his wayes, τ holy in all his workes. The LORDE is nye vnto all them that call vpon him, yee all such as call vpon him faithfully.

He fulfilleth the desyre of them that feare him, he heareth their crye, and helpeth them.

The LORDE preserueth all them that loue him, but scattereth abroad all the vngodly.

My mouth shal speake the prayse of the LORDE, And let all flesh geue thanks vnto his holy name for euer and euer. Halleluya.

The cxlv. Psalme.

PRAYSE the LORDE (o my soule):^a whyle I lyue wil I prayse the LORDE, yee as lōge as I haue eny beyng, I wil synge prayes vnto my God. O put not youre trust in prynces, ner in the childe of man, for there is no helpe in thē. For when \S breth of man goeth forth, he shal turne agayne to his earth, and so all his thoughtes perishe. Blessed is he that hath \S God of Iacob for his helpe, and whose hope is in the LORDE his God. Which made heauen and earth,^c \S see and all that therin is, which kepeth his promise for euer. Which helpeth them to right \S suffre wronge, which fedeth \S hongrie. The LORDE lowseth men out of preson, the LORDE geueth sight to the blynde.

The LORDE helpeth thē vp that are fallen, the LORDE loueth the righteous. The LORDE careth for the straungers, he defendeth \S fatherlesse and wyddowe: as for the waye of \S vngodly, he turneth it vpsyde downe. The LORDE thy God (o Sion) is kyng for euermore, and thorow out all generacions. Halleluya.

The ende of the Psalter.

SELA. In the psalter this worde Sela commeth very oft, and (after the mynde of the īterpreters) it is asmoch to saye as, allwaye, contynually, for euer, forsoyth, verely, a lifyinge vp of the voyce, or to make a pause and earnestly to consider, and to ponder the sentēce.

The Prouerbes of Salomon.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The wysdome of God calleth vs by the mouth of Salomō, exorteth vs, and geueth vs warnynge to eschue the wicked : whose vngodly cōuersacion in worde and worke, and punyshment also of the same, is here descrybed.

Chap. II.

How wysdome maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III.

He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience : he commendeth wysdome, & requyeth us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII.

A fatherly exortacion vnto wysdome, with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mēbres of oure body fro euell.

Chap. V.

He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and to bewarre of harlottes : he telleth what harme maye folowe therout, whē men medle with soch : he teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their married wyues, and descrybeth the ende of the vngodly.

Chap. VI.

He warneth men to bewarre of suertishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to laboure, sheweth the wikednesse of false tonges, and requyeth men to bewarre of aduouty, because it is more perlous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII.

He exorteth vnto wysdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt happeneth vnto soch as encline to the prouocaciōs and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII.

Wysdome calleth men swetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.

Chap. IX.

Wysdome crieth vpō the ignoraūt, and promiset them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X.

From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, louely and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it : Agayne, how men maye auoide foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.

Chap. XXXI.

Wysdome warneth vs to bewarre of euell women, and descrybeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behaoure of an honest married wyfe.

THESE are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge of Israel : to lerne wysdome, nurtoure, vnderstandinge, prudence, righteousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome : and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof : the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speeches of the same. ^aThe feare of the LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

A MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawe of thy mother: for that shal brynge grace vnto thy heade, & shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto synners,^a yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, & lurke preuely for the innocēt wythout a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like y^e hell, ¹let us deuoure thē quyeke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy lott amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, re-frayne thy fote frō their wayes. ²For their fete rūne to euell, & are haistie to shed bloude. B But in wayne is y^e net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wysdome crieth without,³ & putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before y^e congregacion in y^e open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow y^e cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil y^e scornors delyte in scornynge, & y^e vnwyse be enemies vnto knowledge? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes.

C Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: ⁴I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despyed, and set my correcciōs at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in youre destruccion, and mocke you, when y^e thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē y^e thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and youre misery like a tempest: yee whā trouble and heynysse cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And y^e because they hated knowledge, and receaued not y^e feare of y^e LORDE, but abhorred my counsell, and despyed my correccion. Therefore shal they eate y^e frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counceils: for y^e turnynge awaye of y^e vnwyse shal slaye thē, & y^e prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destrucciō. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell safely,⁵ and haue ynough without eny feare of euell.

The ij. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my cōmaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, & callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: Thē shalt thou vnderstōde y^e feare of the LORDE, and fynde y^e knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wysdome,⁶ out of his mouth commeth knowlege and vnderstōdinge. He preserueth y^e welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them y^e walke innocently: he kepeth them in y^e right path, and preserueth y^e waye of his sayntes. B Then shalt thou vnderstōde rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wysdome entre in to thine herte, and thy soule delyte in knowlege: then shal counsell preserue the, and vnderstōdinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be deliyuered frō y^e euell waye, and from the man y^e speaketh frowarde thinges. From soch as leaue the hye strete, and walke iⁿ y^e wayes of darcknesse: which reioyce in doyngue euell, and delyte iⁿ wicked thinges: whose wayes are croked, and their pathes slaunderous.

C ⁷That thou mayest be deliyuered also from the straunge woman, and from her that is not thine owne: which geueth swete wordes, forsaketh the huszbande of hir youth, and forgetteth the couenaunt of hir God. For hir house is enclyned vnto death, and hir pathes vnto hell. All they that go in vnto her, come not agayne, nether take they holde of the waye of life.

That thou mayest walke in y^e good waye, and kepe the pathes of the righteous. For the iust shal dwell in the londe, and the innocentes shal remayne in it: but the vngodly shalbe roted out of y^e londe, and the wicked doers shalbe taken out of it.

So shalt thou fynde fauoure and good vnderstandinge in f sight of God and men. Put thy trust in f LORDE with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goinges. ^aBe not wyse in thine owne conceate, but feare f LORDE and departe from euell: so shal thy navel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

B ^bHonoure the LORDE with thy substance, t with f firstlinges of all thine increase: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despye not the chastenyng of f LORDE, nether faynte when thou art rebuked of him. For who the LORDE loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, t opteyneth vnderstandinge, for the gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, t the profit of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth the precious stones, ^c t all f thynges f thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, t vpon hir left hande is riches t honoure.

Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life ^d to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

C With wysdome hath f LORDE layed the foudacion of f earth, t thorow vnderstandinge hath he stablished f heauens. Thorow his wysdome f depths breake vp, t f cloudes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thynges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my counsell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, t grace vnto thy mouth.

Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, t thy fote shal not stomble. Yf thou slepest, thou shalt not be afraied, ^ebut shalt take thy rest t slepe sweetly. Thou needest not to be afraied of eny sodane feare, nether for the violent rusinge in of the vngodly, when it cometh.

For the LORDE shal be besyde the, t kepe

thy fote f thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shulde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Saye not vnto thy neyghboure: go thy waye t come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neyghboure, seynge he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryue not lightly with eny man, where as he hath done f no harme. ^fFolowe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the LORDE abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORDE is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous.

As for the scornewfull, he shal laugh the to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue honoure in possession, but shame is the promociō that fooles shal haue.

The iiii. Chapter.

HEARE (O ye children) the fatherly exhortaciō, t take good hede, that ye maye lerne wysdome. Yee I shal geue you a good rewarde, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. For when I myself was my fathers deare sonne, and tenderly beloued of my mother, he taught me also, sayenge: ^glet thine herte receaue my wordes, kepe my commaundementes, and thou shalt lyue.

Get the wysdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not f wordes of my mouth, t shreke not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyllyng to opteyne wysdome, and before all thy goodes to get the vnderstandinge. Make moch of her, ^hand she shal promote the: Yee yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto honoure.

B She shal make the a gracious heade, and garnish the with f crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that the yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the f waye of wysdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse hynder the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drike the wyne of robbery. The path of the rightuous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighter & brighter vnto the perfecte daye. But f waye of the vngodly is as the darknesse, wherin mē fall, or they be awarre.

C b My sonne, marcke my wordes, and enclyne thine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. The b. Chapter.

A M Y sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, & bowe thine eare vnto my prudēce: f thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nourtoure.

d For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at f last she is as bitter as wormwood, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir steppes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therfore (o my sonne) and departe not frō the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye f dores of hir house. That thou geue not thine honoure vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell.

B That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, g that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Yee that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I nourtoure? why dyd my hert despyse correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, & herkened not vnto them that in-fourmed me? I am come almost in to all mysfortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne spriges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, & not straungers with the. Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For euery mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he pōdereth all their goingses. The wickednesses of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greате foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The bi. Chapter.

Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come ī to thy neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, & intreate thy neighbour: let not thyne eyes slepe, ner thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo frō f honde, & as a byrde frō the hōde of the fouler. There be sixe thynges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seuenth he vtterly abhorreth: "A proude lōke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte y goeth aboute with wicked ymaginaciōs, fete that be swift in rennyng to do myschefe, a false wytnesse y bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers cōmaundemētes, & forsake not y lawe of thy mother. Put thē vp together in thine herte, and bynde thē aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & y when thou awakest, thou mayest talke of thē ("For the commaundement is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chastenynge & nourtoure is y waye of life) that they maye kepe the frō the euell woman, & frō the flaterynge tonge of the harlott: y thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be takē with hir fayre lōkes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bred, but a mariēd woman wil hunt for y precious life. Maye a man take fyre in his bosome, and his clothes not be brent? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. "Men do not vtterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satisfie his soule, when he is hongerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes asmooch, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so cōmitteth aduourtrie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruccion. He getteth him self also shame & dishonoure, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wrath of the mā will not be ytreated, no though thou woldest ofre him greate giftes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

The viij. Chapter.

MY sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vp my cōmaundemētes by the. "Kepe my cōmaundemētes & my lawe, euē as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fynghers, & wryte thē in the table of thine hert. Saye vnto wysdome: thou art my sister, and call vnderstandinge thy kynswoman: "that she maye kepe y frō y straunge womā, & frō y harlot which geueth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thorow the treliēs, & behelde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye towarde the harlottes house in the twylyght of the euenynge, when it begāne now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a disceatfull, wāton & an vntedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in y house, now is she without, now i y stretes, & lurketh i euery corner) she caught y yōge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, sayēge: I had a vowe to paye, & this daye I perfourme it. Therefore came I forth to mete the, that I might seke thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckt my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrre, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of moneye with him, who can tell whē he cōmeth home? "Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flaterynge lippes she wanne him.

Immediately he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punyshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life lyeth there vpō. Heare me now therfore (o my sonne) and marcke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaue in hir pathes. For many one hath she wōided and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

Stondeth she not in the hye places in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childrē of mē) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto knowlege o ye ignoraūt, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate matters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of ꝑ trueth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are rightuous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therin. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstōde, & right to thē that fynde knowlege. Receauē my doctrine therfore and not syluer,^a & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cāst desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

B I wysdome haue my dwellynge with knowlege, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and ꝑ eschuyngē of euell. As for pryde, disdayne, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thiges, I vitterly abhorre thē. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstandinge, I haue strenght.

Thorow me, kynges reigne: ^athorow me, prīces make iust lawes. Thorow me, lordes beare rule, and all iudges of ꝑ earth execute iudgmēt. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are with me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better thē golde & precious stone, & myne encrease more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in ꝑ waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

C The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he beganne his workes afore tyme. ^aI haue bene ordered frō euerlastige, & frō ꝑ begynnynge or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of ꝑ mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. ^eFor when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordre: whan he hanged the cloudes aboue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the depe: ^fWhan he shutt the see within certayne bowndes, that ꝑ waters shulde not go ouer their marckes. When he layed the foundations of the earth, I was with him, ordryngē all thinges, delytyngē daylie & reioysynge allwaye before him. As for the roude cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.^g

Therefore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nourtoure, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is ꝑ man that heareth me, watchinge daylie at my gates, & geuynge attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The ix. Chapter.

WYSDOME hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seven pilers: she hath slaughted, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crie vpon the hyst place of the cite: Who so is ignoraūt, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. Forsake ignoraūce, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstandinge.

Who so reproueth a scornfull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. Geue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wilbe the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, ^a & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderstandinge. For thorow me thy dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shal be many. Yf thou be wyse, thy wysdome shal do thy selfe good: but yf thou thynkest scorne therof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish restlesse woman, full of wordes, and

The r. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

A WYSE sonne maketh a glad father, but ^a an vndiscrete sonne is the heynynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuousnesse delyuereth from death. ^b The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth ^c vngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quicke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in haruest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louynge and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but ^d fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous. ^e The memoriall of the iust shall haue a good reporte, but the name of the vngodly shal styneke. A wyse man wil receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face.

B He that leadeth an innocent life, walketh surely: ^f but who so goeth a wrōge waye, shalbe knowne. He ^g wynketh with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shalbe beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but ^h mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, ⁱ but loue couereth ^j multitude of synnes.

In ^k lippes of him ^l hath vnderstōdinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but ^m rodde belōgeth to ⁿ backe of ^o foolish. Wyse mē laye vp knowlege, but ^p mouth of ^q foolish is nye destrucciō. The rich mā's goodes are his strōge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The rightuous laboureth to do good, but the vngodly vseth his increase vnto synne.

C To take hede vnto ^r chastenyngē of nurture, is ^s waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wrōge. Dissembynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slaunder, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysest of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the rightuous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. ^t The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for careful trauaile, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly & maketh but a sporte of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to beware of soch.

The thinge that the vngodly are afraied of, shal come vpon them, but the rightuous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer & is nomore sene, but the rightuous remaineth sure for euer. As vyneger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto ^u eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of ^v LORDE maketh a lōge life, but ^w yeares of ^x vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the rightuous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a corage vnto ^y godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The rightuous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, ^z but ^{aa} vngodly shal not remayne in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the rightuous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The ri. Chapter.

A FALSE balaunce is an abhominacion ^{ab} vnto the LORDE, ^{ac} but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealyngē of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaithfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destrucciō. ^{ad} Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse delyuereth frō death. B vngodly man dyeth, his hope is gone, the confidence of riches shal perish. The rightuous shalbe delyuered out of trouble, & the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thorow \hat{y} mouth of \hat{y} dyssembler is his neghbour destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be delyuered. ^a When it goeth well with the rightuous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but whan the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slaunder of his neghbour, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. ^b A dyssemblynge person wil discour preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. ^c Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. ^d He that is suertye for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that meddleth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious womā manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. He \hat{y} hath a gentle liberrall stomacke, is mercifull: but who so hurteth his neghbour, is a tyraūt.

The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuosnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. It shal not helpe \hat{y} wicked, though they laye all their hondes together, but the sede of the rightuous shalbe preserued. A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a rynge of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust labour for peace and traquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

^e Some man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but \hat{y} nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is euer in poerte. ^f He that is lyberall in geuynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his corne, shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessynge shal light vpon his heade that selleth it. He that laboureth for honesty fyndeth his desyre: but who so seketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall,

Who so maketh disquyetnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruaunt to the wyse.

The frute of the rightuous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wynneth mens soules. ^h Yf \hat{y} rightuous be recōpēd vpō earth, how moch more thē the vngodly & \hat{y} synner?

The xij. Chapter.

WHO so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hateth to be reproofed, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE,ⁱ but \hat{y} wicked wyl he condemne. A man cā not endure in vngodlynnesse, but \hat{y} rote of \hat{y} righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir huszbonde: but she that behaueh herself vnonestly, is a corrupcion in his bones. The thoughtes of \hat{y} righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for bloude, but the mouth of \hat{y} righteous wil delyuer them. Or euer thou canst turne the aboute,^j the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde.

A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despysed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh,^k is better thē one that is gorgious and wanteth bred.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. ^l He that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he \hat{y} foloweth ydynes, is a very foole. The desyre of \hat{y} vngodly hunteth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. ^m The wicked falleth in to the snare thorow \hat{y} malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euery man shal enioye good acordinge to the innocēcy of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. ⁿ Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be couceled. There shal no mysfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. ^B "The LORDE abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that labour for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Heuynesse discourageth ^γ herte of man,^b but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberal vnto his neyghboure, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceauē them selues. A disceatfull man shal fynde no vantage, but he that is content with that he hath,^c is more worth the golde. In the waye of righteousnesse there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The xiiij. Chapter.

^A WYSE sonne wyll receaue his fathers warnynge, but he ^γ is scornfull, wyll not heare when he is reprovēd. A good mā shal enioye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that kepeth his mouth, kepeth his life: but who so speaketh vnadysed, fyndeth harme. The slogarde wolde fayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligēt shal haue plenty. A righteous man abhorreth lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Righteousnesse kepeth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse shal ouerthrowe the synner.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge:^d agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes euery man deluyereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reprovēd. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull,^e but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysēment, there is wysdome. Hastely gottē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tariēge for a thinge that is dyffered,

The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstōdinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despyers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messaūger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh ^C scorne to be reformed, cometh to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honour. When a desyre is brought to passe, it delyteth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschuet euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpanyō of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschefe foloweth vpon synners, but the rightuous shal haue a good rewarde. Which their childers childrē shal haue in possessiō, for ^z the riches of the synner is layed vp for ^γ iust. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the feldes of the poore, ^z shalbe increased out of measure. ^a He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, holdeth him euer in nurtoure. B synne, but there is fauourable loue amōge the righteous. The herte of him that hath vnderstandinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner be to presumptuous for eny sodane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouerthrowne, but the tabernacles of f righteous shal florish. a There is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof ledeth vnto death. The herte is sorowfull euen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is heynesse. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignoraūt body beleueth all thinges, but who so hath vnderstandinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpatient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The euell shal bowe them selues before f good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the dores of the righteous. The poore is hated euen of his owne neighbours, but the riche hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neighbour, doth amysse: a but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymagin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpō good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulnessse. Diligēt laboure bryngeth riches, but where many wayne wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

B Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse delyuereth soules, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoide the snares of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusiō of the prynces. Pacience is a token of wisdome, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth awaye the bones. c He that doth a poore man wrōge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is afraied of euery parell, but the righteous hath a good hope euē in death. Wysdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstandinge, and he wyl teach them that are vnlearned. d Rightuousnes setteth vp the people, but wyckednesse bryngeth folke to destruccion. A discrete seruauit is a pleasure vnto f kynge, but one f is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The xv. Chapter.

A SOFTE aswere^a putteth downe displeasure, but frowarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in euery place, both vpon f good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a broken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he f taketh hede whan he is reprovved, shal haue f more vnderstōdinge.

In the house of the righteous are greate riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysordre. slouthfull is full of thornes, but \hat{y} strete of the righteous is well censed. A wyse sonne maketh a glad father, ^abut an vndiscrete body shameth his mother. A foole reiroyseth in foolish thinges, but a wyse man loketh well to his owne goinges. Vnadyused thoughtes shal come to naught, but where as are men \hat{y} can geue counsell, there is stedfastnesse. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient answer? O how pleasaunt is a worde spoken in due season? The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē, \hat{y} a man shulde bewarre of hell beneth.

D The LORDE wyl breake downe \hat{y} house of \hat{y} proude, but he shal make fast \hat{y} borders of \hat{y} wyddowe. The LORDE abhorreth \hat{y} ymaginacions of \hat{y} wicked, but pure wordes are pleasaunt vnto him. The couetous man wrutteth vp his owne house, but who so hateth rewardes, shal lyue. A righteous mā museth in his mynde how to do good, but \hat{y} mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth \hat{y} prayer of the righteous. Like as \hat{y} clearnesse of \hat{y} eyes reiroyseth \hat{y} herte, so doth a good name fede \hat{y} bones. The eare \hat{y} harkeneth vnto wholesome warnynge, and enclyneth therto, shall dwell amonge \hat{y} wyse. He that refuseth to be reformed, despyseth his owne soule: but he that submytteth himself to correccion, is wyse.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THE feare of \hat{y} LORDE is \hat{y} right scyēce of wysdome, and lowlynes goeth before honoure. A man maye well purpose a thinge in his harte, but \hat{y} answer of \hat{y} tonge cōmeth of \hat{y} LORDE. ^aA mā thinketh all his waies to be clene, but it is \hat{y} LORDE \hat{y} fashioneth \hat{y} myndes. ^cCommytte thy workes vnto \hat{y} LORDE, and loke what thou deuysest, it shal prosper. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne sake, yee τ when he kepeth \hat{y} vngodly for \hat{y} daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all presumptuous τ proude hertes, there maye nether strength ner power escape. With lounge mercy τ faithfulness synnes be forgiven, and who so feareth \hat{y} LORDE eschueth euell. When a mans wayes please \hat{y} LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge with righteousness, the greate rentes wrongeously gotten. ^aA mā deuyseth a waye in his herte, but it is \hat{y} LORDE \hat{y} ordreth his goinges. When \hat{y} prophecy is in \hat{y} lippes of \hat{y} kynge, his mouth shal not go wrōge in iudgment. ^aA true measure τ a true balaunce are \hat{y} LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a grea^e abhominaciō when kynges are wycked, for a kynges seate shulde be holden vp with righteousnesse.

Righteous lippes are pleasūt vnto kynges, and they loue him \hat{y} speaketh \hat{y} trueth.

The kynges displeasure is a messaunger of death, but a wyse man wyl pacifie him.

The cherefull countenaunce of \hat{y} kynge is life, and his lounge fauoure is as the euenynge dewe. ^aTo haue wysdome in possession is better then golde, and to get vnderstandynge, is more worth then syluer. The path of \hat{y} righteous eschueth euell, τ who so loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne soule.

Presumptuousnes goeth before destruccione, and after a proude stomake there foloweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde with the lowly, then to deuyde \hat{y} spoyle with \hat{y} proude. He \hat{y} handleth a matter wysely, opteyneth good: τ blessed is he, ^a \hat{y} putteth his trust in \hat{y} LORDE. Who so hath a wyse vnderstandinge, is called to counsell: but he \hat{y} can speake fayre, getteth more riches. Vnderstandinge is a well of life vnto him \hat{y} hath it, as for \hat{y} chastenynge of fooles, it is but foolishnesse. The herte of the wyse enfourmeth his mouth, and amendeth \hat{y} doctryne in his lippes.

Fayre wordes are an hony combe, a refreshynge of \hat{y} mynde, τ health of \hat{y} bones.

^aThere is a waye \hat{y} men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeth vnto death. A troublous soule disqueteth hir selfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly personne stereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whote burnynge fyre.

A frowarde body causeth strife, and he \hat{y} is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh deuyson amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neighbour, τ ledeth him \hat{y} waye \hat{y} is not good.

He that wyncketh with his eyes, ymagineth myschefe: and he \hat{y} byteth his lippes, wyl do

A pacient man is better then one that is ströge: and he that can rule him selfe, is more worth then he ^y wynneth a cite. The lottes are cast in to the lappe, but their fall stödeth in the LORDE.

The xviij. Chapter.

BETTER is a drye morsell with quyetnesse, thē a full house and many fatt catell with stryfe. ^b A discrete seruauit shal haue more rule then the sonnes ^y haue no wysdome, and shal haue like heretage with the brethren. ^c Like as syluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the furnace, euen so doth the LORDE proue the hertes. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, ^d a dyssemblynge persone geueth eare to a disceatfull töge. ^e Who so laugheth ^y poore to scorne, blasphemeth his maker: and he ^y is glad of another mans hurte, shal not be vnpunished. Childers children are a worshippe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the honoure of the children. An eloquent speech becömeth not a foole, a dyssemblynge mouth also besemeth not a prynde. Liberalite is a precious stone vnto him that hath it, for where so euer he becömeth, he prospereth. Who so couereth another mans offence, seketh loue: but he ^y dyscloseth the faute, setteth frendes at variance. One reprove only doth more good to him ^y hath vnderstödinge, then an C. stripes vnto a foole. A sedicious persone seketh myschefe, but a cruell messaunger shal be sent agaynst him. It were better to come agaynst a she Bere robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynst a foole in his foolishnes. ^f Who so rewardeth euell for good, the plage shal not departe frō his house. ^g He ^y soweth discorde ^h strife, is like one ^y dyggeth vp a water broke: but an open enemye is like the water ^y breaketh out ⁱ rēneth abroad. The LORDE hateth as well him ^y iustifieth ^j vngodly, as him ^y condemneth the innocēt. What helpeth it to geue a foole money in his höde, where as he hath no mynde to bye wysdome? He is a frende that allwaye loueth, ^k and in aduersite a man shal knowe who is his brother. Who so promiseth by the hande, ^l is suertie for another, he is a foole. He ^m loueth strife, delyteth in synne: ⁿ who so setteth his dore to hye, seketh after a fall. Who so hath a frowarde herte, opteyneth no good: and he ^y hath an ouerthwarte tonge, shal fall in to myschefe. An vnwyse body bryngeth him selfe in to sorowe, and ^y father of a foole can haue no ioye. ^o A mery herte maketh a lusty age, but a sorowfull mide dryeth vp ^p bones. The vngodly taketh giftes out of the bosome, to wraist the wayes of iudgment. ^q Wysdome shyneth in ^y face of him ^y hath vnderstödinge, but ^y eyes of fooles wandre thorow out all lödes. ^r An vndiscrete sonne is a grefe vnto his father, and heynesse vnto his mother ^y bare him. To punysh ^y innocent, and to smyte ^y prynces ^y geue true iudgmēt, are both euell. He is wyse and discrete, ^y tempereth his wordes: ^s and he is a mā of vnderstödinge, ^y maketh moch of his sprete. ^t Yee a very foole (when he holdeth his tonge) is counted wyse, and to haue vnderstödinge, when he shutteth his lippes.

The xviij. Chapter.

WHO so hath pleasure to sowe discorde, ^a piketh a quarell in euery thinge. A foole hath no delyte in vnderstödinge, but only in those thinges wherin his herte reioyseth. Where vngodlynes is, there is also diszdayne: ^b so there foloweth shame ^c dishonoure. The wordes of a mā's mouth are like depe waters, and the well of wysdome is like a full streame. ^d It is not good to regarde ^e persone of the vngodly, or to put backe ^f righteous in iudgmēt. A wyse herte laboureth for knowlege, and a prudent eare seketh vnderstandinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to honoure and worshipec, & setteth him amonge greates men.

C The righteous accuseth hī self first of all, yf his neighbour come, he shal fynde him. The lot pacieth ſ variaūce, & parteth ſ mightie asunder. The vnite of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satisfied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that loueth it, shal enioye the frute therof. ^aWho so fyndeth a wife fyndeth a good thyng, & receaueth an wholsome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth mekely, but the riche geueth a rough answer.

A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frēdshipec, and sticketh faster vnto him then a brother.

The xij. Chapter.

BETTER is the poore ^athat lyueth godly, B thē the blasphemers that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fote, stumbleth hastily. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, & then is his herte vnpacient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsakē of his owne frendes. ^cA false wytnesse shal not remayne vnpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hāgeth vpō greates men, & euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethren: yee his owne frendes forsake him, & he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothinge. He that is wyse, loueth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstandinge, shal prospere. A false wytnesse shal not remayne vnpunished, & he ſ speaketh lyes shal perishe. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstondinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledeth a godly and an innocent life, ^ahappie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

33 A kynge that sytteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryueth awaye all euell. Who can saye: ^bmy hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of ^ceye, ^dthe LORDE hath made the both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto pouerte: but open thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

Euery mā liketh the bred that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thorow counsell the thynges that men deuise go forwarde: & with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Medle not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a slaunderer, and disceaueth with his lippes. ^fWho so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darcknesse. The heretage that commeth to haistely at the first, shal not be prayed at the ende. 33 Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, & he shal defende ^gthee. The LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balaunce is an euell thyng. ^hThe LORDE ordreth euery māns goings, for what is he, that vnderstandeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blasphemie that which is holy, ⁱ& then to go aboute with vowes. A wyse kynge destroyeth ^jthe vngodly, & bryngeth the whele ouer them. The lanterne of ^kthe LORDE is ^lthe breth of man, & goeth thorow all the inwarde partes of the body. Mercy & faithfulness preserue the kynge, ^m& with louynge kyndnes his seate is holden vp. The strength of yonge men is their worshippe, & a gray heade, is an honoure vnto ⁿthe aged. Woundes dryue awaye euell, and so do stripes the inwarde partes of the body.

The xxi. Chapter.

THE kynges hert is in the hande of the LORDE, ^olike as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer he wyll. Euery man thinketh his owne waye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth ^pthe hertes. ^qTo do rightuousnesse and iudgment is more acceptable to the LORDE than sacrifice.

A presumptuous loke, a proude stomacke, & the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, brynge plenteousnes: but he ^ris vnaduyced, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches with ^sthe disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, & like vnto them that seke their owne death. The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruction, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the frowarde are straunge, ^tbut ^uthe workes of him ^vis cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder ^wthe house toppe, then with a braulynge woman in a wyde house. 33

^a Take not ouer greate traauayle and labour to be riche, beware of such a purpose. Why wilt thou set thine eye vpon ^ȳ thinge, which sodenly vanisheth away? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight like an Aegle in to ^ȳ ayre. Eate not thou with ^ȳ enuyous, and desyre not his meate, for he hath a maruelous herte. He sayeth vnto ^ȳ: eate and drynke, where as his herte is not with ^ȳ. Yee ^ȳ morsels that thou hast eaten shalt thou perbreake, and lese those swete wordes. Tel nothinge in to ^ȳ eares of a foole, for he wyl despyse the wyszdome of thy wordes. ^b Remoue not ^ȳ olde lande marke, and come not within ^ȳ felde of the fatherlesse: For he ^ȳ deliuereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the. Applie thine herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowlege. ^c Witholde not correccon from ^ȳ childe, for yf thou beatest him with the rodde, he shal not dye therof. Thou smyttest him with the rodde, but thou delyuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf thy herte receaue wyszdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee my reynes shal be very glad, yf thy lypes speake the thinge ^ȳ is right. ^d Let not thine herte be gelous to folowe synners, but kepe ^ȳ still in the feare of the LORDE all the daye lōge: for the ende is not yet come, and thy pacient abydinge shal not be in vayne. My sonne, geue eare ^ȳ be wyse, so shal thine hert prospere in the waye. Kepe no company with wyne bebbers and ryotous eaters of flesh: for such as be dronckardes and ryotous, ^e shal come to pouerte, ^ȳ he that is geuen to moch slepe, shal go with a ragged cote. Geue eare vnto thy father that begat the, and despyse not thy mother whan she is olde. Labour to get ^ȳ treuth: sell not away wyszdome, nourtoure ^ȳ vnderstōdinge (for a righteous father is maruelous glad of a wyse sonne, ^ȳ delyteth in hī) so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare the, shal reioyse. My sonne, geue me thyne herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. ^f For an whore is a depe graue, and an harlot is a narrow pytt. She lurketh like a thefe, and those that be not awarre she brigeth vnto her. Where is wo? where is sorow? where is strife?

where is braulynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed it is, and what a coloure it geueth in the glasse.

It goeth downe softly, but at the last it byteth like a serpēt, and styngeth as an Adder.

So shal thine eyes loke vnto straunge women, ^ȳ thine herte shal muse vpon frowarde thinges. Yee thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in ^ȳ myddest of ^ȳ see, or vpō ^ȳ toppe of the mast. They wounded me (shalt thou saie) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. Whē I am wel wakened, I wil go to ^ȳ drynke agayne.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BE not thou gelous ouer wicked mē, ^ȳ desyre not thou to be amonge them.^g

For their herte ymagineth to do hurte, ^ȳ their lippes talke of myschefe. Thorow wyszdome an house shalbe buylded, ^ȳ with vnderstōdinge it shalbe set vp. Thorow discrecion shal ^ȳ chābers be fylled with all costly ^ȳ pleasaunt riches. A wyse mā is strōge, yee a mā of vnderstōdinge is better, thē he ^ȳ is mightie of strēghth. For with discrecion must warres be takē in honde, and where as are many ^ȳ can geue counsell, there is ^ȳ victory. Wyszdome is an hie thinge, yee euē to ^ȳ foole, for he darre not opē his mouth in ^ȳ gate. He ^ȳ ymagineth myschefe, maye wel be called an vngracious personne. The thought of ^ȳ foolish is synne, ^ȳ ^ȳ scornfull is an abhominacion vnto mē. Yf thou be ouersene ^ȳ negligēt in tyme of nede, thē is thy strēghth but small. Delyuer thē ^ȳ go vnto deaht, ^ȳ are led awaie to be slaine, ^ȳ be not negligēt therin. Yf thou wilt saie: I knewe not of it. Thynkest thou ^ȳ he which made ^ȳ hertes, doth not cōsidre it? ^ȳ ^ȳ he which regardeth thy soule, seith it not? Shal not he recōpence euery man accordinge to his workes? My sonne, thou eatest hony ^ȳ swete hony cōbe, because it is good ^ȳ swete in thy mouth. Euen so shall ^ȳ knowlege of wysdome be vnto thy soule, as soone as thou hast gottē it. And there is good hope, yee thy hope shal not be in vayne. Laye no preuy waite wickedly vpon ^ȳ house of ^ȳ righteous, ^ȳ disquiete not his resting place. "For a iust mā falleth seven tymes, & ryseth vp agayne, but ſy vngodly fall in to wickednes. Reioyce not thou at ſy fall of thine enemye, and let not thine herte be glad whan he stomblyeth.

Lest ſy LORDE (when he seyth it) be angrie, & turne his wrath from him vnto the. "Let not thy wrath & gelousy moue ſy, to follow ſy wicked and vngodly. And why? ſy wicked hath nothinge to hope for, "and ſy cādle of the vngodly shall be put out. My sonne, feare thou ſy LORDE & ſy kinge, & kepe no cōpany with ſy slaunderous: for their destruction shal come sodenly, & who knoweth ſy fall of thē both?

These are also ſy saïges of ſy wyse.

It is not good, to haue respecte of any personne in iudgmēt. He ſy saïeth to ſy vngodly: thou art righteous, him shall the people curse, yee ſy cōmōtie shal abhorre him. But they ſy rebuke ſy vngodly shalbe cōmended, & a riche blessinge shal come vpō thē. He maketh him self to be well loued, that geueth a good answer. First make vp thy worke ſy is with out, & loke well vnto ſy which thou hast in ſy felde, & thē buylde thine house. Be no false wytesse agaynst thy neighbour, & hurte him not with thy lypyes. "Saye not: I wil hādle him, euē as he hath dealt with me, & wil rewarde euery mā accordinge to his dedes. I wente by ſy felde of ſy slouthfull, & by ſy vnyarde of the foolish mā. And lo, it was all couered with nettels, & stode full of thistles, & ſy stone wall was brokē downe. This I sawe, & cōsidered it wel: I loked vpō it, & toke it for a warnynge. "Yee slepe on still a litle, slōbre a litle, folde thine hōdes together yet a litle: so shall pouerte come vnto the as one ſy trauayleth by ſy waye, & necessite like a wapened man.

The xrb. Chapter.

THESE also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Iuda gathered together. It is the honour of God to kepe a thinge secrete, "but ſy kinges honour is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, ſy earth is depe, and ſy kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take ſy drosse from ſy syluer, & there shalbe a cleane vessell therof.

Take awaye vngodlinesse frō ſy kyng, & his seate shalbe stablished with rightuousnes.

Put not forth thy self in ſy presence of ſy kyng, & prease not in to ſy place of greaite men.

Better it is ſy it be sayde vnto ſy: "come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in ſy presence of ſy prynce, whom thou seyst with thine eyes. "Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre thy self so at ſy last, ſy thy neighbour put ſy to shame. Handle thy matter with thy neighbour himself, & discouer not another mans secrete: lest whan men heare therof, it turne to thy dishonoure, & lest thine euell name do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe.

The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a Jewell of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the haruest, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, & refreszsheth his masters mynde.

Who so maketh greaite boasts & geueth nothinge, is like cloudes & wynde without rayne. "With pacience maye a prynce be pacified, & with a soft tongue maye rigorousnes be brokē. Yf thou findest hony, eate so much as is sufficiēt for ſy: lest thou be ouerfull, & per breake it out agayne. Withdrawe thy foote frō thy neighbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytesse agaynst his neighbour, he is a very speare, a swearde & a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clotheth hī with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalke. Yf thine enemye hunger, fede him: "yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpō his heade, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a back byters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, "then with a braulynge woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a sprynge ſy is destroyed.

"Like as it is not good to eate to moch hony, euen so he that wyll search out hye thynges, it shal be to heuy for him. He that can not rule him self, is like a cite, which is broken downe, and hath no walles.

The xxiij. Chapter.

LIKE as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in haruest: euen so is worshipe vnseemly for a foole. Like as f byrde and the swalowe take their flight and fle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man. v nto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a brydle, and a rodde to the fooles backe. Geue not the foole an answer after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make f foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteth eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thinge to haue legges t yet to halte, eue so is a parable in f fooles mouth.

He f setteth a foole in hye dignite, f is eue as yf a man dyd cast a precious stone vpō f galous. A parable in a fooles mouth, is like a thorne f pricketh a droncken man in f hande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite,^c euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne afresh. Yf thou seyest a man f is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hi.^d The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in f waye, and a lyon in f myddest of the stretes. Like as the dore turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd. e The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh him self wyser, then vij. men that sytt and teache.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one f taketh a dogg by f eares. Like as one shuteth deadly arowes and dartes out of a preuy place,^f euen so doth a dyssembler with his neghboure, And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in sporte. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out:^g and where the bacbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd f

fyre: euen so doth a braulinge felowe sterve vp variance. A slaunders wordes are like flattery, but they pearse f inwarde partes of f body. Venymous lippes t a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered with syluer drosse. An enemie dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth myschefe: but whā he speaketh fayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominaciōs in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. h Who so dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fal therin: and he f weltreth a stone, shal stamble vpon it hymselfe.

A dyssemblynge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flaterige mouth worketh myschefe.

The xxvij. Chapter.

MAKE not thy boost of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye.ⁱ Let another mā prayse the, t not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thyne. j The stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a fooles wrath is heuyier then they both. Wrath is a cruell thige, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde envye? k An open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a loue, but f kysses of an enemie are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an honycombe: but vnto him that is hōgrie, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde f forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that cā geue good counsell, reioyseth a mans neghboure. Thyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brother farre of. My sonne, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shal make answer vnto my rebukers. A wyse man seyng the plage wyl hyde him self, as for fooles they go on still, and suffer harme. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger,^m t take a pledge of him for the vknowne mans sake. He that is to hastie to praise his neghboure aboue measure, shalbe taken as one f geueth him an euell reporte. A brawlynge woman and the rofe of the house droppynge.

in a raynie daye,^a maye well be compared together. He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde, and holdeth oyle fast in his hōde. C Like as one yrō whetteth another, so doth one man comforte another. Who so kepeth his fyge tre, shal enioye the frutes therof: he that wayteth vpon his master, shal come to honoure. Like as in one water there apeare dyuerse faces,^b euē so dyuerse men haue dyuerse hertes. Syluer is tryed in the moulde, ⁊ golde in the fornace, ⁊ so is a man, when he is openly praysted to his face. Though thou shuldest bray a foole with a pestell in a morter like otemeell, yet wilt not his foolishnesse go from him. ^cSe ⁊ thou knowe the nombre of thy catell thy self, and loke well to thy flockes. For riches abyde not allwaye, ⁊ the crowne endureth not for euer. The hay groweth, ⁊ grasse cōmeth vp, ⁊ herbes are gathered in ⁊ mountaines.

The lambes shal clothe the, ⁊ for the goates thou shalt haue money to thy huszbondry.

Thou shalt haue goates mylke ynough to fede the, to vpholde thy husholde, ⁊ to susteyne thy maydens.

The xrbīij. Chapter.

A THE vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him,^d but the righteous stondesth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne ⁊ londe doth oft change hir prync: but thorow men of vnderstondinge ⁊ wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynuall rayne that destroyeth ⁊ frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse ⁊ vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. ^eWicked men discerne not the thinge ⁊ is right, but they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. ^fA poore man ledynge a godly life, is better then the riche that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstondinge: but he ⁊ fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vaūtage ⁊ wynnyng, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. ^gHe that turneth away his eare from hearinge ⁊ lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth ⁊ righteous in to an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pytt, but ⁊ iust shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstondinge, cā perceaue him wel ynough. ^hWhen righteous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure florish: but when the vngodly come vp, ⁊ state of men chaungeth. He that hydeth his synnes, shall not prospere: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shall haue mercy. Well is him that stōdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischefe. Like as a roaringe lyon and an hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly pryncce ouer the poore people.

Where the prync is without vnderstondinge, there is greate oppression ⁊ wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetousnesse, he shal longe raigne. ⁱHe that by violēce sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to succoure him. ^kWho so leadeth a godly and an innocēt life, shalbe safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shall once haue a fall. He ⁊ tylleth his londe,^l shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth ydilnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commēded, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, ^mshal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of personnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euen for a pece of bred. D He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shall come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shall fynde more fauoure at ⁊ last, thē he that flatreth him. Who so robbeth his father and mother,ⁿ and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a motherer.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in ⁊ LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. ^oHe that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth away his eyes from soch as be in necessite, shall suffre greate pouerte himself.

The rrii. Chapter.

A HE that is stiffnecked & wyll not be re-fourmed, shal sodenly be destroyed with out eny helpe. °Where þy righteous haue the ouer hande, þy people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there þy people mourne. Who so loueth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: °but he þy kepeth har-lottes, spēdeth away þy he hath. With true iudgment þy kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man þy taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flatreth his neighboure, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of þy wicked is his owne snare, but þy righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous consid-redeth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstandyng. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The bloude-thyrstie hate the righteous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his sprete alltoget-her, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

Yf a prynce delyte in lyes, all his seruau-tes are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lighteneth both their eyes. °The seate of the kynge þy faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correccion mynistrē wysdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, be bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the righteous shall se their fall. Nurture thy sonne with correccion, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert.
 Where no prophet is, there the people perishe:
 but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruauit wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstonde, yet wil he not regarde them.

Yf thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnaduysed, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruauit from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stereth vp strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. °After pryde commeth a fall, but a lowly sprete bryngeth greate worshippe. Who so kepeth company with a thefe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to honour. Many there be that seke þy prynces fauoure, but euery mans iudgment commeth from the LORDE.

The righteous abhorre the vngodly: but as for those that be in þy right waye, þy wicked hate them.

The rrii. Chapter.

The wordes of Agur the sonne of Iake.

THE prophecie of a true faithfull man, who God hath helped, whom God hath confortēd & nourished. For though I am þy leest of all, & haue no māns vnderstōdige (for I neuer lerned wysdome) yet haue I vnderstōdinge & am well enfourmed in godly thinges.
 Who hath clymmēd vp ī to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence?

Who hath holden þy wynde fast in his hāde?
 Who hath cōprehēded þy waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of þy worlde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? °All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shyldē vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therfore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde as a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remove fro me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte ner riches, only graunte me a necessary lyuyng.
 °Lest yf I be to full, I denye þy, & saye: what felowe is þy LORDE? And lest I beinge con-strayned thorow pouerte, fall vnto stealinge, and forswear the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruauit vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte.
 He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vpō the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clesned from their fylthy-nesse. There are people þy haue a proude loke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. The peoples tethe are swerdes, and with their chaft bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore from amonge mē.

This generacion (which is like an horsleche) hath two daughters: þy one is called, fetch hither: the other, brynge hither.

water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. ¶ Who so laugheth his father to scorne, and setteth his mothers commaundement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yonge Aegles.

¶ There be thre thinges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

The waye of an Aegle in y ayre, y waye of a serpent ouer y stone, y waye of a shippe in y see, & y waye of a mā with a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyfe y breaketh wedlocke, which wypeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, & sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. ¶ Thorow thre thinges the earth is disquieted, & the fourth maye it not beare: Thorow a seruauēt y beareth rule, thorow a foole y hath greate riches, thorow an ydle houswife, & thorow an handmayden y is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wyszdome they excede the wyse. ¶ The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in y haruest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth with hir hādes, & y in y kynges palace.

There be thre thinges y go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodliest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of beastes, & geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kyng y goeth forth with his people.

Yf thou be so foolish to magnifie thy self, or medlest with eny soch thinge, thē laye thine hāde vpon thy mouth. Who so chyrneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

The xxxi. Chapter.

¶ THESE are the wordes of Kyng Lamuel, & y lesson y his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my body: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substaunce & mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō euē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kynges no wyne, geue kynges & prynces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, & regarde not y cause of the poore, & of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, & wyne vnto those y mourne: that they maye drynke it, & forget their misery & aduersite. Be thou an aduocate & stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dome & succourles. With thy mouth defende y thinge y is laulful and right, and y cause of y poore and helplesse.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithful womā, she is moch more worth thē perles. The herte of hir husbāde maye safelye trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles.

She wil do him good & not euel all y dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll & flax, & laboureth gladly with hir handes. She is like a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in y night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, & foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, & byeth it, and with the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir houswifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, & hir hande taketh holde of y rocke.

She openeth hir hande to y poore, yee she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not y colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornamētes, hir clothige is whyte sylke & purple. Hir huszbāde is moch set by in y gates, whē he sitteth amonge y rulers of y londe. She maketh cloth of sylke & selleth it, and deliuereth a gyrdle vnto y marchaūt.

Strēgth and honoure is hir clothinge, & in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wyszdome, & in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loketh wel to the wayes of hir housholde, & eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise & call hir blessed, & hir huszbande maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be y gather riches together, but thou goest aboute thē all. As for fauoure, it is disceatfull, and beutie is a vayne thinge: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayسد. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

Ecclēsiastes.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

All thinges (yf a mā wyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vnstedfast, then man him self.

Chap. II.

In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mēcion of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the only euerlastinge God.

Chap. III.

Euery thinge hath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath put tedyousnesse and trauayle in it, to exercise men withall. What so euer a man enioyeth of his laboure, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IIII.

A cōsideracion of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the deuty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.

Chap. V.

Agaynst foolish and temerarious vowes. Let no man maruayle that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI.

Agaynst those riche mē that darre not enioye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII.

No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profit of wyszdome.

Chap. VIII.

Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the workes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX.

Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulnessse shulde men enioye the giftes of God. Wyszdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI.

In these two chapters are many wyse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.

Chap. XII.

In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanynge, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the conclusion, that there is nothyng stedfast and durable but God himself, who men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of Daid, kyng of Ierusalem.

ALL is but vanite (saith ȝ preacher) "all is but playne vanite. For what els

hath a mā, of all the laboure ȝ he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abyedeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, ȝ he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth towarde ſouth, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himselfe agayne. "All floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, ſo no mā can expresse them. "The eye is not satisfied with sight, the eare is not fylled with hearinge.

B The thinge ſo hath bene, cōmeth to passe agayne: & ſo thinge ſo hath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoo in the tymes ſo haue bene before vs. The thinge ſo is past, is out of remēbraunce: Euē so be the thinges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpon amōge thē that come after. I myself ſo Preacher, beyngē kynge of Israel & Ierusalē, applyed my mynde to seke out & search for the knowlege of all thinges ſo are done vnder heauē. Soch trauayle & labourē hath God geuē vnto ſo childrē of mē, to exercyse thē selues therē.

C Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sōne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexacion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the fautes cā not be nobred. I cōmoned with myne owne herte, sayēge: "lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wyszdome, thē all they ſo haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experiēce of wyszdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: ſo I might knowe what were wyszdome & vnderstōdinge, what were erreure & foolishnes. And I perceaued ſo this also was but a vexacion of mynde: for where moch wyszdome is, there is also greate trauayle & disquietnes: & ſo more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The ij. Chapter.

A THĒ sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyszdome, and to comprēhēde foolishnes, vntill the tyme that (amonge all ſo thinges which are vnder ſo Sonne) I might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

"I made gorgious fayre workes, I buylded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me ortchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. "I made poles of water, to water ſo grene and frutefull trees withall. I bought seruantes and maydēs, and had a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substance of them, then all they ſo were before me in Ierusalem. I gathered syluer & golde together, euen a treasure of kynges & londes.

I provided me syngers and womē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyngē cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater & in more worships, then all my predecessours in Ierusalē. For wyszdome remained with me: & loke what so euer myne eyes desyred, I let them haue it: & wherin so euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withhelde it not frō it. Thus my hert reioysed in all ſo I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But whan I considered all the workes ſo my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therin: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, & nothinge of eny value vnder ſo Sonne. Then turned I me to considre wyszdome, erreure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me ſo kynge in soch workes?) and I sawe, that wyszdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thought I in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labourē eny more for wyszdome? So I confessed within my herte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as ſo foole. Thus begāne I to be weery of my life, in so moch that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite & vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my labourē, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cōmeth after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wyse mā or a foole? And yet shal he be lorde of all my labours, which I with soch wyszdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

D So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so moch as a man shulde weery him self with wyszdome, with vnderstandinge and opportunitie, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, ¹ŷ neuer swett for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a mā of all ²ŷ labour & trauayle of his mynde, ³ŷ he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heuynesse, sorowe & disquietnes all ⁴ŷ dayes of his life? In so moch that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his soule to be mery in his labour? Yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: ⁵For who maye eate, drynke, or brynge eny thinge to passe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wyszdome, vnderstandinge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynesse and sorow, that he maye gather and heape together ⁶ŷ thinge, ⁷ŷ afterwarde shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and vexaciō of mynde.

The iiii. Chapter.

A EVERY thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. ¹There is a tyme to plāte, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, ²ŷ is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to daunce: A tyme to cast away stones, and a tyme to gather stones together: A tyme to embrace, & a tyme to refrayne from embracing: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lese: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sowe together: ³A tyme to kepe sylce, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) B but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the trauayle and carefulnesse which God hath geuen vnto mē, I se that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to euery thinge his due tyme. He hath plāted ignoraunce also in the hertes of men, ⁴ŷ they shulde not fynde out ⁵ŷ grounde of his workes, which he doth from ⁶ŷ beginninge to ⁷ŷ ende. So I perceaued, ⁸ŷ in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, thē to be mery & to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all ⁹ŷ a man eateth & drynketh, yee what so euer a mā enioyeth of all his labour, ¹⁰ŷ same is a gift of God. I cōsidered also ¹¹ŷ what so euer God doth, it cōtinueth for euer, & ¹²ŷ nothinge can be put vnto it ner takē from it: & ¹³ŷ God doth it to ¹⁴ŷ intent, ¹⁵ŷ men shulde feare him. ¹⁶The thinge ¹⁷ŷ hath bene, is now: & the thinge ¹⁸ŷ is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Morouer, I sawe vnder ¹⁹ŷ Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, & iniquite in steade of rightuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the rightuous from the vngodly, & then shal be the tyme & iudgmēt of all counceils & workes. I cōmoned with myne owne herte also cōcernynge the childrē of men: how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth thē apeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, & as the one dyeth, so dyeth ²ŷ other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, so ³ŷ (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust againe.

⁴Who knoweth the sprete of man ⁵ŷ goeth vpwarde, and the breth of the beest ⁶ŷ goeth downe in to the earth? Wherefore I perceaued, ⁷ŷ there is nothinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his porcion. But who wil brynge him to se the thinge, that shal come after him?

The iiii. Chapter.

SO I turned me, & considered all the A violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of soch as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde delyuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherefore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease thē they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauaile and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole foldeth his handes together, & eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better with rest, thē both ³ handes full with labour and trauaile. Morouer, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his careful trauaile, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, & saye:) For whom do I take soch trauaile? For whose pleasure do I thus consume away my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they may well enioye the profit of their labour. Yf one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp againe: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistance: A threefolde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. "Some one commeth out of preson, & is made a kynge: & another which is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto pouerte. And I perceaued, ⁴ yf all men lyuynge vnder the Sonne, go with the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. Whan thou commest in to the house of God, kepe thy fote, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: ⁵ that is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The b. Chapter.

BE not hastie with thy mouth, & let not ^A thine hert speake eny thige rashly before God. For God is in heauen, & thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wordes be fewe. For where moch carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: & where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. "Yf thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. Yf thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Vse not thy mouth to cause thy flesh for to synne, ¹ yf thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in ² yf faute.

And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: "but loke ⁴ yf thou feare God. Yf thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongeously dealt withall, so ⁵ yf equite & the right of the lawe is wraisted in the londe: maruell not thou at soch iudgmēt, for one greate mā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe thē selues together. The whole londe also with the felde and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto ⁶ yf kinge.

He that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delyteth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouringe man slepeth swetely, whether it be litle or moch that he eateth: ⁷ but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a sore plage, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him ⁸ yf hath them in possession.

⁹ For oft times they perishe with his greate misery and trouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carieth nothinge awaye with him of all his labour. This is a miserable plage, ¹⁰ yf he shal go awaye euen as he came. What helpeth it him then, y he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulnesse, sicknesse & sorow.

Therefore me thinke it a better and a fayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his laboure, y he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his laboure: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The vi. Chapter.

THERE is yet a plage vnder y Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge mē: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honour, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spēdeth them. This is a vayne thinge & a miserable plage. Yf a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet can not enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntymely byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, & goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Morouer, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of no rest nether here ner there: Yee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the laboure that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the luyunge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier thē he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The viij. Chapter.

FOR who knoweth what is good for man luyunge, in y dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or, who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? A good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better thē y daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a bancket house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is luyinge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whē the countenance is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of y wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, then to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughinge of fooles is like y crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And y is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The pacient of sprete is angrie then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that y dayes of y olde tyme were better, then they y be now? for that were no wyse question. Wysdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of mysfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

These ij. thiges also haue I cōsidred in y tyme of vanite: y the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore be thou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, y thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let y go out of thy hande. For he y feareth God shal escape them all.

Wysdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the citie: for there is not one iust vpō earth, y doth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto euery worde y is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruaunt curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue I proued because of wyszdome: ^afor I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee a so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciēce, wisdom and vnderstondinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotinge fooles. And I founde,^b that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes. Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her, but the synner will be taken with her.

Beholde (sayeth y preacher) this haue I diligently searched out a proued, y I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. ^cLo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust a right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wyszdome a vnderstōdinge, to geue answeere there vnto.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME maketh a mā face to shyne,^d but malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundemēt (I warne the) a the oath y thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, a se thou cōtinue in no euell thinge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, y doeth he. Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou?^e Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulnes a sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyl tell him? Nether is there eny mā y hath power ouer y sprete, to kepe stil y sprete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, nether maye vngodlynes delyuer him y medleth withall.

B All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene y vngodly^f brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch y they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye a greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundreth tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with thē that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prolōge his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of y rightuous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therefore I commend gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to lerne wyszdome, and to knowe the trauaile that is in the worlde (and that of soch a fashion, y I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all y workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto y workes that are done vnder y Sonne: And though he bestowe his labour to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto thē: yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The ix. Chapter.

FOR all these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the rightuous as with the vngodly:^g with the good a cleane as with the vnclane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afrayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges \hat{y} come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, τ madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyeck dogg (saye they) is better thē a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe \hat{y} they shall dye: but they \hat{y} be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgottē, so \hat{y} they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in \hat{y} worlde, in all \hat{y} is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou thy way then, eate thy bred with ioye, τ drynke thy wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garmētes be all waye whyte,^a τ let thy heade want no oyntmēt.^b Use thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all \hat{y} daies of thy life (which is but vayne) \hat{y} God hath geuē the vnder the Sonne, all \hat{y} dayes of thy vanite: for \hat{y} is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labour τ trauayle \hat{y} thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amōge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowledge ner wysdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder \hat{y} Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in tyme τ fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshe are takē with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Euē so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it cometh sodenly vpon them.

B This wysdome haue I sene also vnder \hat{y} Sōne, τ me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, τ a few mē within it: so there came a greate kynge τ beseged it, τ made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which with his wysdome deluyered the cite: yet was there no body, \hat{y} had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. Neuertheles, a symple mans wysdome is despysed, τ his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre above the crienge of a captaine amōge fooles. For wysdome is better then harnesse: but one vnthrift alone destroyeth moch good.

DEED flies \hat{y} corruppe swete oyntment τ A make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome τ honoure of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, \hat{y} euery mā doth as foolishly as himself. Yf a principall sprete be geuē the to beare rule, be not negligēt thē in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were with a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, \hat{y} ignoraunce \hat{y} is comonly amonge prynces: in \hat{y} a foole sytteth in greate dignite, τ the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses, τ prynces goinge vpon their fete as it were seruantes. But he \hat{y} dyggeth vp a pytt, shall fall therein himself: τ who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal bite him. Who so remoueth stones, shall haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therewith.

When an yron is blont, and \hat{y} poynt not B sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclusion? The labour of \hat{y} foolish is greuous vnto thē, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Wo be vnto the (O thou realme and londe) C whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banckettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulnesse the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh,^a and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euell in thy thought, and speake no hurte of ȝ ryche in thy preuy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and with hir fethers shal she bewraye thy wordes.

The xi. Chapter.

SENDE thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde thē after many yeares. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vpon earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And whē ȝ tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth ȝ wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Now like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how ȝ bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therefore with thy handes to sowe thy sede, whether it be in ȝ mornynge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shall prospere, ȝ yf they both take, it is the better. The light is swete, ȝ a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. Yf a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darcknesse, which shal be many: ȝ when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and lat thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

hode and youth is but vanite. Remembre thy maker in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and or the yeares drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, ȝ light, ȝ Moone and the starres be darkened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe them selues: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: when the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and whan ȝ voyce of the Myller shal be layed downe: whan men shall ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and whan all ȝ daughters of musyck shalbe brought lowe: whan men shal feare in hie places, and be afraied in the stretes: whan the Almonde tre shalbe despyed, the greshopper borne out, and whan greате pouerte shal breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden bende be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, ȝ the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or ^ddust be turned againe vnto earth from whence it came, and or the sprete returne vnto God, which gaue it. ^eAll is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the groude and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. ^dFor the wordes of ȝ wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherwith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therefore beware (my sonne) that aboute these thou make the not many ȝ innumerable bokes, nor take dyuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Lat vs heare the conclucion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that toucheth all men: For God shall iudge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or euell.

Salomons Balettes,

called

Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

A O THAT thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. "Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment, therefore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kynge hath brought me in to his preuy chambre. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thyнке more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B I am black (o ye doughters of Ierusalē) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes,^b and as the hangings of Salomon: but yet am I faire & wellfaoured withal. Maruell not at me \hat{y} I am so black, & why? \hat{y} Sonne hath shyned vpō me. For whan my mothers childrē had euell wil at me, they made me \hat{y} keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) where thou fedest, where thou retest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companions.

Yf thou knowe not thy self (o thou fayrest amōge women) thā go thy waye forth after \hat{y} fotesteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede thy goates besyde \hat{y} shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) with myne hoost & with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then Pharaos.^c

C Then shal thy chekes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged with spāges & goodly iewels: a neck bande of golde wil we make \hat{y} with syluer bottons. When the kynge sytteth at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bōdell of Myrre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

"O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well faoured art thou? Oure bed is decte with floures, \hat{y} sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypresse.

The ij. Chapter.

I AM the floure of the felde, and lylie of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me with grapes, cōforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. "His left hāde lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye doughters of Ierusalem) B by the Roes & hyndes of the felde, \hat{y} ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Me thyнке I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there commeth he hoppinge vpon \hat{y} mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stondest behynde oure wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth thorow the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stōde vp my loue, my doue, my beutyfull, & come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are come vp in the felde, the twynginge tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure londe. The fyge tre bryngeth forth hir fyges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

C O stōde vp my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall: O let me se thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Gett vs the foxes, yee the litle foxes that hurte & vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth amōge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come agayne preuely (o my beloued) like as a Roo or a yonge harte vnto the mountaynes.

The iij. Chapter.

A BY night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all & stretes will I seke him whom my soule loueth, but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute & cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So whan I was a litle past them, I fōude him whom my soule loueth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go, vntill I brynge him in to my mothers house, and in to hir chambre that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

B Who is this, that commeth out of & wyl-dernesse like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myrre, frankencense and all maner spyes of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomōs bedsteade there stonde LX. valeaunt men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes euery one, & are experte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpō his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bed-steade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, & seate of purple, & grounde pleasantly paved for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and beholde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherwith his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The iij. Chapter.

O HOW fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washing place: where euery one beareth two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are louely: thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of Dauid buylded with bulwerkes, wher vpon there hāge a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapēs of the gīautes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amōge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myrre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spott is there in the.

Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppes of Amana, from the toppes of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes and from the mountaynes of & leopards. Thou hast wōded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and louely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse? Thy brestes are more pleasant then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylck and hony is vnder thy tonge, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water sprynge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradys of pōgranates with swete frutes: as Cypress, Nardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myrre, Aloes, and all the best spycles. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of luyngge waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vp thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vp^o my gardē, that the smell thereof maye be caried on euery syde: Yee that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therein.

The b. Chapter.

A COME in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myrre with my spycle, I wil eate my hony and my hony cōbe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylk. Eate (o ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakyng, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y^e lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

B I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued towarde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My hādes dropped with Myrre, & the Myrre ranne downe my fyngers vpon y^e lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

C Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hī, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answer. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, fōude me, smote me, and wounded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garmēt fro me. I charge y^e therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboute other louers, O thou fayrest amonge wemen? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are busshed, browne as the euenyng: His eyes are as the eyes of doues by the water brokes, washen with mylck, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: His chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaries plāte all maner of swete thinges: His lippes droppe as the floures of the most pryncipall Myrre, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, decte ouer with Saphyres: His legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sokettes of golde: His face is as Libanus, and as the bewty of the Cedre trees: His throte is swete, yee he is altogether louely. Soch one is my loue (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone thē (o thou fayrest amonge wemē) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seke him with the?

The vi. Chapter.

MY loue is gone downe in to his garden, vnto y^e swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which fedeth amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as louelynesse itself, thou art fayre as Ierusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners. (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude.) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon y^e mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe y^e be clypped, which go out of the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, & not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes y^e which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge wemē without nombre. But one is my doue, my derlyng. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, & deare vnto her that bare her. Whā the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: Yee the quenes and concubines prayed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the mornynge? fayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their banners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to se what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde florished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynce of my people made me sodenly afraied. Turne again, turne againe (O thou Sulamite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that we maye loke vpon the.

The biij. Chapter.

WHAT pleasure haue ye more in y^e Sulamite, than when she daunseth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaut are thy treadings with thy shues, thou prynces daughter? Thy thees are like a fayre iewell, which is wrought by a conynge workmaster: Thy nauell is like a rounde goblett, which is neuer without drynke: Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, sett aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like y^e water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which loketh toward Damascus: That heade that stondest vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how fayre and louely art thou (my derlynge) in pleasures? Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrels like the smell of apples, and thy throte like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure & cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take oure lodginge in the vyllages. In the mornynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be sponge forth, yf the grapes be growne, & yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde oure dores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The biij. Chapter.

O THAT I might fynde the without & kysse y^e, whom I loue as my brother which suckte my mothers brestes: & that thou woldest not be offended, yf I toke the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His lefte hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, tyll she be content herself. What is she this, that cometh vp from the wildernes, and leaneth vpon hir loue? I am the same that waked the vp amonge the aple trees, where thy mother beare y^e, where thy mother brought the in to the worlde.

O set me as a seale vpō thine hert, and as a seale vpon thine arme: for loue is mightie as the death, & gelously as the hell. Hir coales are of fyre, and a very flamme of the LORDE: so y^e many waters are not able to quench loue, nether maye y^e streames drowne it. Yee yf a man wolde geue all the good of his house for loue, he shulde counte it nothinge.

When oure loue is tolde oure yonge sister, whose brestes are not yet growne, what shal we do vnto her? Yf she be a wall, we shal buyde a syluer bollworke there vpon: Yf she be a tower, we shal fasten her with bordes of Cedre tre.

Yf I be a wall, & my brestes like towres, then am I as one that hath founde fauoure in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde deliuered he vnto the keepers: y^e euery one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geueth the a thousande, and two hundreth to y^e keepers of the frute.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companions maye herken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert vnto the swete smellinge mountaynes.

Chap. LXVI.

The outwarde ceremonies of the Iewes are re-

 God.

THIS is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Ierusalem : In the tyme of Osias, Ioathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

HEARE o heauen, hearken o earth,^a for the LORDE speaketh : I haue no-rished ⁊ brought vp children, and they are fallen away fro me. An oxe knoweth his lorde, and an Asse his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a frawerde generacion, vnnatural children. ^b They haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherefore shulde ye be plagued eny more? For ye are euer fallinge awaye.
 The whole heade is sick, and the herte is very heuy. ^c From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all youre body : but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oyntment.

^d Youre londe lieth waiste, youre cities are brent vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and loke vpon it : and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer ^e daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vnyearde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged citie. And excepte the LORDE of 13
 hostes had left us a few alyue : ^f we shulde haue bene as Sodoma, ⁊ like vnto Gomorra.

^g Heare the worde of the LORDE ye ty-rautes of Sodoma : and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
 Why offre ye so many sacrifices vnto me?
 I am discontent for the brentoffringes of wethers, and with ^h fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye apeare before me, who requyeth you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblations, for it is but lost labour. ⁱ I abhorre youre incense.

I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. ^aYoure fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen for my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out youre hondes, ^byet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

^cWash you, make you cleane, ^cput awaye youre euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deliuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complainthe come before you. Now go to (saith the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? Yf ye be lounye ^dor obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. ^eBut yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the righteous citie (which was full of equite) is become vnfaithfull as an whore? righteousness dwelt in it, but now murthur. ^fThy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte with water. Thy prynces are traytours and companys of theues. ^gThey loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therefore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpō thē. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, ^hand set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from ⁱfy begynnynge. ^jThen shalt thou be called the righteous citie, the faithful citie. But Sion shalbe redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with righteousness. For the transgressours and vngodly, and such as are become vnfaithfull vnto the

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oketrees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardēs that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, ^kand as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to drie strawe, ^land he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER this is the worde that was ^mopened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Iuda and Ierusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: ⁿThat the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe ^ofy chefe amōge hilles, and exalted aboue al litle hilles. ^pAnd al heithē shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: ^qvp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of ^rfy God of Iacob: ^sfy he maye shewe us his waye, ^tand ^ufy we maye walke in his pathes. For ^vfy lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, cycles ^wand sawes therof.

And therefore get \hat{y} soone in to some rock, "and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from \hat{y} glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe \hat{y} high lokes of presumptuous personnes, "and bryngeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shall be exalted in \hat{y} daye. For the daye of \hat{y} LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde τ presumpciō, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal bringe them all downe: vpō all high τ stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge \hat{y} is glorious and pleasaunt to loke vpon.

"And it shall bringe downe the pryde of man, "and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. "But the Idols shal utterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, "and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: "what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, thē shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honour the) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from \hat{y} sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The iiij. Chapter.

EVERY man can eschue a persone moued in anger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes take awaye frō Ierusalē τ Iuda, all possessiōs τ power, all meat and drinke, \hat{y} captayne and the soudyare, \hat{y} iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstandinge: the masters of craftes and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saieth the LORDE) and babes shall haue the rule of you. "One shall euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by \hat{y} bosome, and saye: thou hast clothinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meate ner clothinge in my house, make me no rueler of the people. For Ierusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and counsels are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes thew selues, as the Sodomites, τ hyde thē not. Wo be vnto their soules, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. "But wo be to \hat{y} vngodly and vnrighteous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse \hat{y} , and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders deceaue the, and "treade out the waye of thy footsteppes. "The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondeith to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, "and shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burnt vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherefor do ye oppresse my people, and marre \hat{y} faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hoostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saieth \hat{y} LORDE: Seinge the daughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with wayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their fete: Therefore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgiousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, bracelettes and hooues, \hat{y} goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, brussches and headbandes, rynges and garlades, holy daye clothes and vales, kerchues and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe styck amonge them. And for their gyrdles

The iiij. Chapter.

AT that tyme shall their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal syt as desolate folck vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and clothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprove maye be takē from us. ^aAfter that tyme shal the braunch of [†] LORDE be beautiful and mightie, and [†] frute of the earth shalbe fayre and pleasaunt ^b for those Israelites that shall springe therof. Then shall the remnaunt in Sion and the remnaunt at Ierusalem be called ^B holy: namely al soch as are written amonge the luyunge at Ierusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shall wash awaye the desolacion of the daughters of Siō, and poure the bloude out from Ierusalem, with [†] wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregation, shal the LORDE prouyde a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shyninghe of a flammynge fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserued. And Ierusalem shall be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The v. Chapter.

NOW well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vynyarde. ^cMy beloued frende hath a vnynearde in a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he loked [†] it it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Ierusalem and whole Iuda:) Iudge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynegarding. ^dWhat more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Therefore then hath it geuen thornes, where I loked to haue had grapes of it.

Well, I shall tell you how I will do with my vynyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe [†] wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd [†] cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vynyarde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Iuda his fayre plantinge. Of these he loked for equyte, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioyn one house to another, and bringe one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. ^eWil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hoostes rowneth me thus: i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in the? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but thre.

Wo be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in dronkynnes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, ^f tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regarde not the worke of the LORDE, ^g and cosidre not the operaciō of his bondes. Therfore cometh my folck also in captiuyte, ^h because they haue no vnderstondynge. Their glory shalbe myxte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therfore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdom, with such as reioyse therin, maye descende in to it.

ⁱ Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hoostes, [†] holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equyte and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal [†] lambes eate their apoynted foder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto the, as it were with a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart rope. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and go forth with his worke, that we maye se it.

 Let the counsell of \hat{y} holy one of Israel come, and drawe nie, \hat{y} we maye knowe it.

\hat{b} Wo vnto them that call euell good, and good euell: which make darcknesse light, γ light darcknesse, \hat{y} make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vnto them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstōdinge. \hat{c} Wo vnto them, \hat{y} are connyng men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set vp drōkenesse. \hat{d} These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the righteous.

\hat{f} Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful,) their blossome shall vanish awaye like dust or smoke, \hat{e} for they despyse the lawe of the LORDE of hostes, and blaspheme the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kyn-dled also agaynst his people, and he shaketh his honde at them: yee he shal snyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the opē stretes, like myre. \hat{f} After all this, the wrath of God shall not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, \hat{g} and call vnto them in a farre countre: and beholde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, nor not a slogish nor sleperry parson.

\hat{h} There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, ner lowse the lachet of his shue. Their arrowes are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoofes are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wynde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hāch vp the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from thē. In that daye they shalbe so feare vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yf we loke to heauen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vii. Chapter.

\hat{a} IN the same yere \hat{y} kynge Osias dyed, I sawe the LORDE \hat{b} sittinge vpon an high and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled \hat{c} \hat{d} palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphins, wherof euery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, with twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hostes. \hat{e} The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee \hat{f} the geastes and dorechekes moued at their crienge, and the house was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: O wo is me. For I was astonished: that I (which am a man of vn-cleane lippes, and dwell amonge people \hat{g} hath vn-cleane lippes also:) Shulde se \hat{h} \hat{y} Kyng and LORDE of hostes with myne eyes.

Then flewe one of the Seraphins vnto me, \hat{t} hauinge a hote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the aluter with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, γ thy vnrightousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgeuen. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge advysement on this maner: Whom shall I sende, and who wilbe oure messaunger? Thē I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shall heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, \hat{e} ye shal planely se, and not perceauē. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not with their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnder-stande not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

\hat{d} Then spake I: LORDE, how longe? he answered: vntil the cities be vtterly without inhabitours, and \hat{y} houses without men, till the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnbuylded. For the LORDE shal take the men farre awaye, so that the londe shal lye waist. Ne-uertheles, the tenth parte shal remayne therin, for it shal conuerte and be fruitfull. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Oketrees bringe forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute. \hat{f}

Israel: wente vp toward Ierusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, [¶] Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (ye and [¶] hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Isab) at the heade of [¶] ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokyng fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: because that the Kynge of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue [¶] wekely conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vex the, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a Kynge there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saith the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head cite of [¶] Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threscore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chefe cite of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Romelies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.^a Morouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge: requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde [¶] hight aboue. The sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: [¶] Beholde, a virgin shal cōceave and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, [¶] he maye knowe the euel, and chose [¶] good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so afrayde for) shalbe desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpō thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme [¶] Ephraim departed from Iuda) thorow [¶] kynge of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flies [¶] are aboute the water of Egipte, and for [¶] Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valey, in [¶] vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thynges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue [¶] the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beard clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with [¶] kynge of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundance of mylke, [¶] he shal make butter and eat it. So that euery one which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shalbe turned to brears and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arowes and bowes, so shal all the londe become brears and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpō them, for feare of brears and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viij. Chapter.

MOROUER the LORDE sayde vnto [¶] me: "Take the a greate leaf, and wyte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: Vrias the prest, and Zacharias [¶] sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maherschallal haschbas, that is. a spedie robber, an hastie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, [¶] is father, and mother: shal [¶] riches of Damascus and [¶] substance of Samaria be takē awaye, [¶] thorow the kynge of [¶] Assirians.

The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: [¶] for so much as the people refuseth the stillrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water vpon them: namely, [¶] [¶] kynge of the Assirians with all his power. Which shall poure out his furyousnes vpon euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes. And shal breake in vpon Iuda, increasinge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe with his brode wynges,

C O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, yet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by the honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of the, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. Neuertheles feare them not, nether be afraide of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifyinge, and stone to stomble at, the rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be broke vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

B Now laye the witnesses together (sayde the LORDE) and seale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Iacob, and I loke vnto him. But lo, as for me, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Israel, for the LORDE of hostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therefore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soysayers, witches, charmers and coniurers, then make them this answer: Is there a people enywhere, that axeth not counsel at his God: whether it be concernyng the dead, or the lyuynge? Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hunger. And yf he suffre hunger, he is out of patience, and blasphemeth his kynge and his God. Then loketh he vwarde, and downe warde to the earth, and beholde, there is trouble and darcknesse, vexacion is rounde aboute him, and the cloude of erreure. And out of soch aduersite, shall he not escape.

The ii. Chapter.

EUEN like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, that the londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nephthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Iordane in to the londe of Galilee) was at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles the people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwell in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and the rod of his oppressoure, as in the daye at Madiã.

Morouer all temerarious and sedicious power (yee where there is but a cote fylled with bloude) shalbe burnt, and fede the fyre. For vnto us a childe shalbe borne, and vnto us a sonne shalbe geue. Vpon his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shalbe called with his owne name: The woderous geuer of counsel, the mightie God, the euerlastinge father the pryncce of peace, he shal make no ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal syt vpon the seate of Dauid and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to stablish it with equyte and rightuousnesse, from thence forth for euermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hostes bringe to passe.

C The LORDE sent a worde in to Iacob, the same is come in to Israel. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwell in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemye agaynst the, and so ordre their aduersaries, that the Sirians shal laye holde vpon them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Israel with open mouth.

After all this, the ^awrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hostes. Therefore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by ^f tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceauers. Soch as men thynke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

^d Therefore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge mē, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypcrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redebush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal ^f wrath of the LORDE of hostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famesh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The r. Chapter.

^a WO be vnto you ^f make vnrightuous lawes,^b and deuyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: wherthorow the poore are oppressed, on euery daye, and the innocetes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wyddowes maye be youre praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitacion and destruction, that shal come from farre? To whom will ye renne for helpe? or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the presoners, or lye amonge the deed? After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

^e Wo be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punyishment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypcritish people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfaoure shal I send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanyng is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wynde, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynde the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Ierusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone as I haue perfourmed my whole worcke vpon the Hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: the will I also vyset the noble and stoute kynge of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondesth thus in his owne cōceate: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wisdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde out the hostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, ^f darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whisper.

^g But doth the axe boost itself, agaynst him ^f heweth therewith, or doth the sawe make eny krakinge, agaynst him that ruleth it? That were euen like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though ^f staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. ^h Therefore shal the LORDE of hoostes sende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. ^a But the light of Israel shalbe \hat{y} fyre, and his Sanctuary shalbe the flame, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and breyers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and felde shalbe consumed with body and soule. As for him self, he shalbe as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shalbe of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

¶ After \hat{y} daye shal the remnaunt of Israel, and soch as are escaped out of the house of Iacob, seke no more cōforte at him that smote them, but shal comferte them selues with faithfulness and treuth in the LORDE, the holy, one of Israel. ^b The remnaunt, yee and the Posteritye of Iacob, shal cōuerte vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only conuerte vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmēt of him that floweth in rightuousnesse: and therefore \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therefore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afrayde for the kinge of the Assirians: He shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egyp̄tiās dyd sometyme: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfilled agaynst their blasphemies.

¶ Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal prepare a scourge for him, ^c like as was the punyshmēt of Madiā vpō \hat{y} mount of Oreb. ^d And he shal lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd somtyme ouer the Egyp̄tians. Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shulders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. He shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer \hat{y} foorde. Gaba shal be their restinge place, Rhama shalbe afrayde, Gabea Saul shal fle awaye. The voyce of \hat{y} noyse of thy horses (o daughter Gallim) shalbe herde vnto lais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madmena shal tremble for feare, but the citesyns of Gabim are māly, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Ierusalem. But se, the LORDE God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, with feare. He shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shal be rooted out with yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fal.

The xi. Chapter.

AFTER this there shal come a rod forth ¶ of \hat{y} Kynrede of Iesse, ^a and a blossome out of his rote. The sprete of the LORDE shal light vpon it: the sprete of wysdome, and vnderstandinge: the sprete of counceyl, and strength: \hat{y} sprete of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shal make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shal not geue sentēce, after the thinge \hat{y} shal be brought before his eies, nether reprove a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightuousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal he refourme the symple of the worlde.

^b He shal smyte \hat{y} worlde with \hat{y} staff of his mouth, ^c and with \hat{y} breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. ^d Rightuousnesse shalbe the gyrdle of his loynes, treuth and faithfulness the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. Thē shal \hat{y} wolfe dwel with the lābe, and the leoparde shal lye downe by the gote. ^e Bullokes, lyons and catel shal kepe company together, so that a litle childe shal dryue them forth. The cowe and the Bere shal fede together, and their yongones shal lye together. The lyō shal eate strawe like the oxe, or the cowe. The childe whyle he sucketh, shal haue a desyre to the serpentis nest, and whē he is weened, he shal put his hande in to the Cockatryce denne. ^f Noman shal do euil to another, no man shal destroye another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth shalbe ful of \hat{y} knowlege of \hat{y} LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Iesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. ^g At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, ^h to conquere \hat{y} remnaunt of his people (which are left alyue) From the Assiriās, Egiptians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiās and Ilōdes of the see. ^a And he shal set vp a tokē amonge the Gentiles, and gather together ^ȝ dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of ^ȝ worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and ^ȝ enmyte of Iuda shalbe clene rooted out. Ephraim shal beare no euell wil to Iuda, and Iuda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpō the shulders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Idumytes and the Moabites shal let their hōdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egiptiās see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, ^ȝ remayneth from the Assirians, ^b like as it happened to ^ȝ Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egipte.

The xij. Chapter.

SO that then thou shalt saye: O LORDE, I thanke thee, for thou wast displeased at me, but thou hast refrayned thy wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. ^c Beholde, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not afrayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therefore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the welles of the Sauoure, and then shal ye saye: ^d Let vs geue thanks vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name, and declare his counsels amonge the people, and kepe them in remembrance, for his name is excellēt. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greate thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greate is thy prince: the holy one of Israel.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THIS is ^ȝ heuy burthē of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some tokēs to the hie hilles, ^e call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the prynces maye go in at the dore. For I will sende for my debites and my gyaūtes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as tryumphe in my glory.

^f With that, me thought I herde in the mōutaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greate people: and a ruzzshinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hostes was the captayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauē: Euē the LORDE himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourn therefore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyr from ^ȝ allmighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens hertes shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefulnesse and sorowe shal come vpō them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. ^g One shall euer be abaszshed of another, ^h their faces shal burne, like ^ȝ flāme.

For lo, the daye of the LORDE shall come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the londe waist, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not geue their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, ⁱ and the Mone shal not shyne with his light. And I wil punysh the wickednesse of the worlde, ^j the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The hye stomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of tyrautes. I will make a man dearer thē fyne golde, and a man to be more worth, thē a golden wedge of Ophir. Morouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shal remoue out of hir place.

Thus shall it go with Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hostes in ^ȝ daye of his fearfull indignaciō. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke without a shepherde. Euery mā shal turne to his owne people, ^k ^l fle echone in to his owne londe. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed with the swerde. And Babilō (ſ̄ glory of kigdomes and bewtie of the Caldees honoure) shalbe destroyed, euē as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorra.* It shal neuer be more inhabited, nether shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

The Arabians shall make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wylde beastes shal lie there, ⁊ ſ̄ houses shalbe full of greate Oules. Estriches shal dwell there, ⁊ Apes shal daunce there: The litle Oules shall crie in the palaces, one after another, ⁊ Dragōs shalbe in the pleasaunt perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, ⁊ hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The xiii. Chapter.

A BUT ſ̄ LORDE wilbe mercyfull vnto Iacob, ⁊ wyll take vp Israel agayne, ⁊ set thē in their owne lōde. Straūgers shal cleue vnto thē, ⁊ get thē to ſ̄ house of Iacob. ^b They shal take ſ̄ people, ⁊ cary thē home with thē. And ſ̄ house of Israel shal haue thē in possession, for seruauētes ⁊ maydēs in ſ̄ lōde of ſ̄ LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: ⁊ rule those, ſ̄ had oppressed thē. When ſ̄ LORDE now shal bringe ſ̄ to rest, frō ſ̄ tra-uayle, feare, ⁊ harde bondage ſ̄ thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon ſ̄ kinge of Babilon, ⁊ saye: How happeneth it ſ̄ ſ̄ oppressour leaueth of? Is ſ̄ golden tribute come to an ende? Doubtles the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, ⁊ the cepter of ſ̄ lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smytheth ſ̄ people with durable strokes, ⁊ in his wōders he persecuteth thē, ⁊ tameth thē cōtinually. And therefore ſ̄ whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, ⁊ men synge for ioye.

B Yee euen the Fyrre trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now ſ̄ thou art layde downe, there come no mo vp to destroye vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge. All mightie men and prynces of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vp frō their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we? art thou become like vnto vs? Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: Mothes shalbe layde vnder the, ⁊ wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

How art thou fallen from heauen ^d (o Lucifer) thou faire mornīge childe? hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that (notwithstandinge) dyddest subdue the people? And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I will clymme vp in to heauen, and make my seate aboute the starres of God, I wyll syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I wyll clymme vp aboute the cloudes, ⁊ wilbe like the highest of all. Yet darre I laye, ſ̄ thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. ^e They that se the, shal narrowly loke vpō the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made ſ̄ kingdomes afraide: Is this he that made the worlde in a maner waist, ⁊ layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, euery one at home in his owne palace, with worshipe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead coarse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried with them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lōde, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without honoure, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childrē, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fyll the worlde ful of castels and townes.

I wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and root out ſ̄ name and generacion of Babilon (saieth the LORDE) ⁊ wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruccion, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne an ooth, sayēge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: ⁊ shalbe fulfilled as I haue deuysed. ^f The Assrians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder fote.

For yf the LORDE of hoostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysanulle it? And yf he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

E The same yere that kynge Achas dyed, God threatned by Esay on this maner: ^a Reioyse not (thou whole Palestina) as though [†] rod of him [†] beateth the were broken: For out of [†] serpentines rote, there shal waxe a cockatrice, & the frute shalbe a fyrie worme. But the poore shall fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. [†] Thy rotes wil I destroye with honger, and it shall slaye thy remnaunt. Mourn ye portes, wepe ye Cities. And feare thou (o whole Palestina) for there shal come fro the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall then maynteyne the messages of the Gentyles? But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the poore of my people shall put their trust in him.

The xv. Chapter.

A THIS is [†] heuy burthē vpō Moab: Ar of Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: ^c The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanished awaye: They wēte to Baith and Dibon in the hie places, for to wepe: Moab did mourne frō Nebo to Medba: All their heades were colled, and al their beardes shauen. ^d In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Iahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Luhith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for [†] hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, & what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. In like maner the thinge [†] was left them of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby.

The crie went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaime vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of bloude, for [†] enemie had sent thither a bonde of men, which as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them [†] were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

THEN sent the lordes of the lōde a mā of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the doughter Sion (For as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byrde, [†] is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre counsel, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, [†] as the night doth: hyde the chased, & bewraye not the that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwell amonge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppresseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyraunte dryueth vs out of oure londe. But [†] Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it with faithfulness & treuth in the house of Dauid, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pride (shal they answeere) it is wel knowne. [†] And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, & hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therfore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now [†] they be smytten, they take their deuyce beneth by the bryckwall, and make their cōplaynte.

The suburbes also of Hesebon were made waist, & the princes of the Gentyles hewed downe [†] vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spred vnto Iazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therefore I mourned for Iazer, & for [†] vynyardes of Sibma with greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their haruest & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of [†] felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sunge. For it hap- pened thus also: whē Moab sawe that she was turned vp syde downe: "she went vp an hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the deuyce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In three yereas shal ŷ power of Moab with their pōpe (which is greate) be minished, like as ŷ burthē of an hyred seruante: And as for ŷ remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not rekened moch worth.

The xviij. Chapter.

A THIS is the heuy burthē vpō Damascus: ^aBeholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waist, The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye thē awaye. Eph- raim shal no more be strōge, & Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for ŷ glory of ŷ remnaunt of ŷ Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childrē of Israel, saieth ŷ B LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal ŷ glory of Iacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to thē, as when one sheareth in haruest, which cutteth his handful with the sickle, & when one gathreth ŷ sheaues together in the valley, of Rephaim, there re- mayneth yet some ears ouer. Or as whē one shaketh an olyue tre, ^cwhich fyndeth but two or thre olyue beries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

C Then shal man cōuerte agayne vnto his maker, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel. And shal not turne to the aulters that are ŷ worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaues & ymages, which his fyngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once ŷ forsakē plowes & corne, which they forsoke, ^dfor feare of ŷ children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God thy Sauoure, & hast not called to remēbraunce ŷ rock of thi strēgh, Wherefore thou hast also set a fayre plāte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thi sēde: But in the daye of haruest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

D Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that russ in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. ^eFor though so many people increase as the flowing waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyrle wynde thorow a storme. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with thē, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

The xviij. Chapter.

WO be to the londe of sfienge shippes, ^awhich is of this syde ŷ floude of Ethiopia: which sendeth hir message ouer the see in shippes of redes vpō ŷ water, and sayeth: go soone, and do youre message vnto a straunge and harde folke: to a fearful peo- ple, & to a people ŷ is further then this: to a desperate and pylled folke, whose londe is deuyded from vs with ryuers of water. Yee all ye ŷ syt in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpō the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the horne bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath ŷ LORDE sayde vnto me. B I layde me downe, and pondred the matter in my house, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in haruest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grene. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the buwes and the braunches, & dyd cast thē awaye. And thus they were layde waist, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for ŷ beastes of the earth together. So ŷ the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is thē this: ŷ desperate and pylled folke (whose londe is deuyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: ^feuen vnto the hill of Sion.

The xx. Chapter.

A THIS is the heuy burthen vpon Egipte: "Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a swifte cloude, and come in to Egipte. And the goddes of Egipte shal trymble at his cōmyngne, and the hert of Egipte shal quake within her. For thus saith the LORDE: I wil stere vp the Egyptians one agaynst another amonge them selues, ^aso that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neigboure, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egipte shalbe choked in hir self. Whē they axe counsel at their goddes, at their Prophetes, at their soysayers and witches: then will I bringe their counsel to naught.

B I wil delyuer Egipte also in to the hondes of greuous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawē out, Nilus shal synke awaye, & be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye. Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon [†]ryuers bancke, yee and what so euer is sowed by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, & brought to naught. The fyshers shall mourne, all such as cast angles in the water, shal complayne, & they that sprede their nettes in the water, shalbe faynt harted. Such as laboure vpon flax & sylcke, shal come to pouerte, & they also that weeue fyne workes. All the poundes of Egipte, all the policie of their Moates & diches shal come to naught.^c

C Yee the vndiscrete prynces of Zoan, the ^dcouncil of the wyse Senatours of Pharaο, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast & saye of Pharaοs behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of [†]olde regall Progeny. But where are now thy wyse mē? Let them tel the & shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egipte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, & proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they ^edyseaeue Egipte with the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egipte dronckē with the sprete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eue like as a dronckē mā goeth spewing aboute. For Egipte shal lacke good counsel, so [†]they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnyng nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water. Thē shal [†]Egiptiās be like vnto womē, afrayde & astōied, at the liftinge vp of the hōde, which [†]LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egyptians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the counsel, which [†]LORDE of hoostes hath deuyed agaynst them. Then shal the fyue cities of Egipte speake with the Canaanites tunge, ande sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, & Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an altur in the myddest of the londe of Egipte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony [†]vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egipte, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauoure to delyuer them.

Morouer, Egipte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egyptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him offringes, yee & paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egipte, & heale it agayne: & so shal they turne to [†]LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpō them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egipte in to Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egipte, and the Egyptians in to Assiria. The Egipcians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egipte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blissed is my people of the Egipcians, Assur is the worke of my hōdes, but Israel is myne enheritaunce.

The xx. Chapter.

THE same yeare that Harthan came to ^aAschdod, where Sargē the kinge of the Assirians sent him, what tyme as he also besieged Aschdod, & wāne it [†]same season: Thē spake the LORDE vnto Esaye [†]sonne of Amos, sayenge: go and lowse of [†]sack cloth frō thy loynes, and put of thy shues from thy

Then sayde the LORDE: where as my seruauent Esaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signyfenge of the thinge, that after three yere shal come vpō Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefote, out of Egipte and Ethiopia.

3 And shal dyscouer ſ shame of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wittes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egipcians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egipcians, at the sight of their glory.

Moreover they that dwell in ſ Iles shal saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is oure hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be deluyered from the kinge of ſ Assirians. How will we escape?

The xxi. Chapter.

2 THIS is the heuy burthē of the waist see: A greuous visiō was shewed vnto me, like as when a storme of wynde and rayne russeth in from the wyldernes, that terrible londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye destroye, let him destroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. With this, the raynes of my backe were ful of payne: ^a Panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. When I herde it, I was abashed: and whē I looked vp, I was afraide. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

3 Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shyldes, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted diligētly, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With ſ came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: ^b Babilon is fallen, she is turned vpsyde downe, and all ſ ymages of hir goddes are smytten to ſ grounde. This (o my felowe throsshers and fanners) haue I herde of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

The heuy burthen of Duma.

One of Seir cried vnto me: ^c watchman, what hast thou espied by night? Watchman, what hast thou espied by night? The watchman answered: The daye breaketh on, and the night is cōmyng: Yf youre request be earnest, then axe, and come agayne.

The heuy burthen vpon Arabia.

4 At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the waye toward Dedanim. Mete the thurstie with water, (o ye citisens of Hema) mete those with bred that are fled. For thei shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawē swerde, from the bēt bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: ouer a yere shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the office of an hyred seruauente goeth out: And the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, ^e shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

2 WHAT hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppe, o thou cite of miracles, sedicious and wilful? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed with swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy captaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinance, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued ſ, I sayde: awaye fro me, ſ I maye wepe bytterly. David,^a wherof there shalbe many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Ierusalē, and break of some of the to kepe [¶] walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxte [¶] twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothing regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal [¶] LORDE of hoostes cal mē to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, & drynke wyne: ^b let vs eate and drinke, tomorow we shal die. Neuertheles whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath [¶] LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

^c Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: 'Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie [¶] in to a farre cōtre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vylleyn of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

^d After this wil I cal my seruaunt Eliakim, [¶] sonne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrdle him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of Ierusalem,^e and of the Kynred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauid's house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shyte, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulness,^f and he shalbe vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hāge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childrē, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe (saith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, [¶] is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulness: shalbe pluckt of, And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xxiij. Chapter.

^a A N heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne ^b ye shippes of Tharsis, ^c for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the Ilondes, the marchautes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all [¶] power of the see cōplaneth, and saith: O [¶] I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, [¶] I had nether norished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egipte perceaueth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye [¶] dwell in the Iles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commende her so greatly? Who hath deuysed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al cities, whose marchautes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? ^d Euē the LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (^eo thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

^f Thus the LORDE (that remoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethēs. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemie wil carie the, where thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them. Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels & palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx. yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeaes, it shal happē to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the citie, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeaes. "The LORDE shal uiset the citie of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundayse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiēge and wynnyng, shalbe halowed vnto the LORDE." For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaūdisie of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the feding and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, y LORDE shal waist and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, & scatre abroad y inhabitants therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that lēdeth vpon vsury, like him y boroweth vpō vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal y worlde be waysted & clene destroyed. For y LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of y earth shal perish & fal awaye, the proude people of y worlde shal come to naught, For y earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why? they haue offended y lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therefore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they y dwell therō, haue synned, wherfore they shalbe brent also, and those that remayne, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all y haue bene mery in harte, shal sighe. "The myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked citis shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smytheth downe y olyues, y are left vpon the tre: "or seketh after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, & shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, & prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and Ilōdes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the rightuous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therefore I must speake: O my vnfrutfulnesse, o my pouerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therefore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt." And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a drunken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdedes shal lie so heuye vpō her, y she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and y kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one warde and punished innumerable daies. "The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hostes shal rule them at Ierusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent council.

The xxiij. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse the, and magnifie thy name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, acordinge to thine olde counceles, truly and stedfastly. "Thou makest of townes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the citie, that they shal neuer be buylded againe. Therefore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the citis of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strēgth for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euell wether, a schadowe agaynst the hete. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrauntes.

B Morouer the LORDE of hostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpō the hill: "A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and welshed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Vpon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale \hat{y} hāgeth before \hat{y} face of al people, and the coueringe wherwith all Gentiles are couered. "As for death, he shal vtterly cōsume it, The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusio of his people thorow \hat{y} whole worlde. For \hat{y} LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse τ delyte in his health. For the hōde of \hat{y} LORDE ceaseth vpō this hil. But Moab shalbe throsshē downe vnder him, like as the straw is trodē vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And with the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes τ hie wallles: he shal buwe them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in to dust.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THEN shal this songe be sunge in the londe of Iuda: "We haue a strōge citie, the wallles τ the ordinaunce shal kepe vs. Opē \hat{y} gates, \hat{y} the good people maye go in, which laboureth for the treuth. He casteth thē to the grōunde, yee euē in to \hat{y} myre, \hat{y} they maye be trodē vnder the fete of the symple, τ with the steppes of

Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, thy name and thy remēbraunce reioyse the soule. "My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, τ my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse. But the vngodly (though he haue receaued grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, τ feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they wil not se thine hie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whē thou shalt deuoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine enemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: "for thou werkest in vs all oure workes. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue dominacion vpon vs as knowe not the: yet graūte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembrance. "The malicious Tyrauntes whē they die, are nether in life nor in the resurrectiō, for thou visitest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increacest the people (o LORDE), thou increacest the people, thou shalt be praysed and magnified in all \hat{y} endes of the worlde. The xxiij. Chapter.

A THEN the LORDE with his heuye, great and lōge swearde shal vyset Leuiathā, that invincible serpēt: eue Leuiathā [⁊] croked serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in [⁊] see. At the same tyme shal mē syng of the vyn-yarde of Muscatel. I the LORDE kepe it, and water it in due season. I watch daye ⁊ night, that no man breake in to it. I beare no euell wil in my mynde. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all faithfulness, shulde burne it vp at once with thornes ⁊ bushes? Or who will enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, [⁊] Iacob shalbe rooted againe, and Israel shalbe grene ⁊ beare floures, ⁊ they shal fyll [⁊] whole worlde with their frute. Smyteth he not his smyter, as euell as he is smyttē himself? B Destroiethe he not [⁊] murtherers, as he is murthured? Euery mā recōpenseth with [⁊] measure [⁊] he receaueth: He museth vpō his sore wynde, as vpō the dayes of extreme heate. And therfore shal the iniquite of Iacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all [⁊] frute of his synnes.

^aAs for aulter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groues and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge cities shalbe desolate, and [⁊] fayre cities shalbe left like a wildernes. The catel shal fede and lie there, and the shepe shal eate it vp. Their haruest shal be brent, ^c their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shalbe defyled. For it is a people without vnderstōdinge, and therfore he [⁊] created them, shal not faouere them: and he [⁊] made them, shal not be merciful to thē. In [⁊] tyme shal [⁊] LORDE shute from [⁊] swifte water of Euphrates, vnto [⁊] ryuer of Egypte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greate trumpet be blown, so that those which haue bene destroyed in the Assirians londe, and those that be scatred abrode in Egypte: shal come ⁊ worships the LORDE at Ierusalē, vpō the holy mount.

The xxiij. Chapter.

WO be to [⁊] crowne of pryde, to [⁊] dronkē Ephraemites, ^a and to the faydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, [⁊] is vpō the toppe of the plētuous valley: which mē be ouer laden with wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foote. And as for the faydinge floure, ^c the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the haruest come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

And then shal the LORDE of hoostes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlade vnto the remnaunt of his people. Vnto the lowly, he shalbe a sprete of iudgment, and vnto them that dryue awaye the enemies from [⁊] gates, he shalbe a sprete of strēghth. snared and taken. Wherefore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDES people, which is at Ierusalē. For ye cōforte youre selues thus: Tush, death ſ we are at a poynte, ¶ as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plague, it shal not come vpon vs. ^aFor with disceate wil we escape, and with nymblenes will we defende oure selues. ^bTherefore thus saieith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil laye a stone in Sion, a greate stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundation: ¶ who so putteth his trust in him, shal not be confounded. Rightiounes wil I set vp agayne in ¶ balauce, and iudgment in the weightes. ^cThe tēpest of hale shal take awaye youre refuge, that ye haue to disceauē withal, and ¶ ouerflowinge waters shal breake downe youre strōge holdes of dissimulaciō. ^dThus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made with death, shalbe done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, shal not stōde. When the greate destructiō goeth thorow, it shal all to treade you, ¶ it shal take you quyte awaye before it. For it shal go forth early in the mornyng, and contynue only ¶ daye and ¶ night. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For ¶ bedde shal be so narrow ¶ a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the coueringe to small, that a mā maye not wynde him self therin. ^eFor the LORDE shal steppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount Perazim, and shal take on as he dyd vpō the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his deuyce, his straunge deuyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worcke. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiuyte increase not: for I haue herde the LORDE of hoostes saye, that there shal come a soden destruction and plague vpon the whole earth. Take hede, and heare my voyce, pondre and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the husbonde man euer in due season earnestly to his londe? he moweth ¶ ploweth his grounde to sowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he soweth it with fitches or comyn. He soweth ¶ wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye also in their place. And ¶ he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and sheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he throsseth ¶ fitches out with a flae, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bred therof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to passe with treadinge out. For nether the brussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hostes which is maruelous in councel, and greate in rightiounesne.

The xxij. Chapter.

WO vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that Dauid wāne. ^aTake yet some yeares, and let some feastes yet passe ouer: then shal Ariel be beseged, so that she shal be heuy and sorouful, and shal be vnto me euen as a lyon. For I wil laye sege to the rounde aboute, and kepe ¶ in with towers, and graue vp dykes agaynst ¶. And thou shalt be brought lowe, and speake out of the earth, and thy wordes shal go humbly out of ¶ grounde. Thy voyce shal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge shal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies shalbe like mealdust. ^bAnd the nombre of Tyrauntes shalbe as ¶ dust that the wynde taketh awaye sodenly.

Thou shalt be visited of the LORDE of hoostes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greate crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempest, and with the flame of a consumynge fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynst Ariel: the whole hooste, the stronge holdes, and sege: is like a dreame which apeareth in the night. ^cIt is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge: like as when a thurstie man dreameth that he is drinkeinge, and when he awaketh, he is faynt, and his soule vnpatient.

So is the multitude of all people, that mustre them selues agaynst the hill of Sion. But ye shalbe at youre wittes ende, ye shalbe abashed: ye shal stackre, and rele to and fro. Ye shalbe dronken, but not of wyne. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: "Like as the Lyon or lyōs whelpē roareth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though ſ multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hoostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Therefore (o ye childrē of Israel) turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in ſ daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of syluer and golde, ^c which ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shalbe slayne with the swerde, not with a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, ^d but not a mans swerde. And he shal fle from the slaughter, and his seruantes shalbe taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge holdes, and his prynces shal fle from his badge. This hath ſ LORDE spokē, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Ierusalem.

The xxxij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, the kinge shal gouerne after ſ rule of rightuousnes, and ſ princes shal rule accordinge to the balaunce of equite. He shalbe vnto mē, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ryuer of water in a thurstie place, and ſ schadowe of a greate rock in a drie lōde. The eyes of the seinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligēt hede. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparite tūge shal speake planely and distinctly. Then shal the nygarde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abhominaciōs agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholdē drinke from the thurstie: These are the perloous weapons of the cuetous, these be his shameful counells: that he maye begyle the poore with disceatful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. ^e But the liberrall person ymagineth honest thinges, and commeth vp with honesty.

O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shalbe abashed and remoued: when ye se the barenesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knock vpō youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes ^g in the cities, wilfulness. The palaces also shalbe broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerckes shal become dennes for euermore, the pleasure of Mules shalbe turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that ſ sprete be poured vpon vs from aboue.

Then shal the wilderness be a fruteful felde ^g the plenteous felde shalbe rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwell in the deserte, and rightuousnesse in a fruteful londe. ^f And the rewarde of rightuousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for euer. ^h And my people shal dwell in the ynnnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in the āll. Beholde, their angels crie with out, the messangers of peace wepe bitterly. The stretes are waist, there walketh no man therein, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a sporte, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basā & Charmel are turned

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, & cōsidre my glory, ye that be at honde. The synners at Sion are afraide, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypo-crites. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumynge fyre? which of vs maye abyde that euerlasting heate? ^e He that ledeth a godly life (saye I) & speaketh the treuth: He that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no counceyl agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euil. There shal Sion be sene, the head cite of oure solempne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Ierusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue,^d whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where fayre broade ryuers & streames are) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greate shippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, The LORDE shalbe oure kinge, & he himself shalbe oure Sauoure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they cā not be better: The mast set vp of soch a fashion, that no bāner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greate spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saieith: I am sick, but all euil is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

COME ye Heithen & heare, take hede ye ^a people. Herkē thou earth & all that is therein: thou rounde cōpasse & al that groweth thervpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, & his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, & to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast out, & their bodies stincke: that euē the very hilles shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, & the heauen shal folde together like a roll, ^b & all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saieith he) shalbe bathed in heauen, & shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeance.

And the LORDES swearde shalbe full of bloude, & be rustie with the fatnesse & bloude of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shal kyl a great offringe in Bosra, and in the londe of Idumea. There shal the Vnicornes fall
 B with the Bulles, (that is with the giauntes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, & their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the daye of the vengeance of God,^c and the yere when as thyne owne iudgmentes shalbe recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pyth, and thine earth to brynnstone, & therwith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, & so forth to lie waist. And no man shal go thorow thy londe for euer: ^d But Pellicanes, Storkes, great Oules, and Rauens shall haue it in possession, & dwell there in.

desolacion vpon it, & weye it with the stones of emptynes. When kinges are called vpō, there shalbe none, and all princes shalbe awaye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettels & thistles in their stronge holdes, & the dragons maye haue their pleasure therein, & that they maye be a courte for Estriches. ^aThere shal straunge viures and monstrous beastes mete one another, & the wyld kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, & haue hir lodgings. There shall the hedghogge buyde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forth his yonge ones. There shal the kytes come together, ech one to his like.

^bSeke thorow the scripture of the LORDE & rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch like) fayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his sprete gather together (or fulfilleth). Vpon whom so euer & lot falleth, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shal possesse the enheritaunce from generacion to generacion, and dwel therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

BUT the deserte & wilderness shal reioyse, & & waiste grounde shal be glad, and flourish as the lilly. She shal flourish pleasantly, and be ioyful, and euer be geuyng of thanks more and more. For & glory of libanus, the bewty of Charmel & Sarō shalbe geuen her. These shal knowe the honoure of the LORDE, and the magesty of oure God. And therefore strength & weake hōdes, and conforte the feble knees.^c Saye vnto them that are of a fearful hert: Be of good chere, and feare not. Beholde: youre God cometh, to take vengeance & to rewarde, God cometh his owne self, and wil delyuer you. ^dThen shal the eyes of the blinde be lightned, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shal the lame man leape as an herte, & the domme māns tēge shal geue thanks.

^eIn the wilderness also there shal welles springe, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe swete floures and grene russes. There shalbe footpathes & comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vncleane person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE himself shal go with thē that waye, and the ignorānt shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauyshinge beast shall come therein nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. ^fAnd the redemed of the LORDE shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankesgeuyng. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure & gladnesse shalbe amōge them, And as for all sorow and heuynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the xliij. yere of kinge Ezechias, ^gcame Sennacherib kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assiriās sent Rabasches from Lachis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a greuous hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow & fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim ^hHelchias sonne the presydent, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabasches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the greате kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduēture) that thou hast counsel & power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thi self of fro me? lo, Thou putttest thy trust in a broken staff of redeⁱ (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharaο the kinge of Egipte, vnto all thē that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in & LORDE oure God: A goodly god, in dede: whose hie places & alteres Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Ierusalem, to worshipe only before the alter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the Assiriās, that he shulde geue the two thousande horses: Art thou able to set mē there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest pryncce that my lorde hath, how darrest thou trust in & charettes and horse men of Egipte? Morouer, thinkest thou & I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDES will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna ⁊ Iohah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Lewes tunge, lest the folke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, ⁊ the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpō the wall? that they be not cōpelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, ⁊ cried with a loude voyce in the Lewes tige, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assiriās geueth you warnynge. Thus saith the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceauē you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Morouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saith: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, ⁊ shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saith the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, encline to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vynyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne: vnto the tyme that I come myself, ⁊ bringe you in to a londe, ⁊ is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sown with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceauē you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer us.

⁊ Might the goddesses of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath ⁊ Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddesses of the lōdes, hath deliuered their cōtre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Ierusalem from my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tungen, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, ⁊ tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

WHEN Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, ⁊ put on a sack cloth, ⁊ went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scribe with the eldest prestes clothed in sack, vnto the Prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, ⁊ they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage ⁊ of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde ⁊ kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie ⁊ blaspheme the lyyunge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE thy God hath herde right well. And therefore lift vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saith the LORDE: Be not afrayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriās seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his cōtre, there will I distroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde ⁊ kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, ⁊ Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde ⁊, he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceauē the, in whom thou hopest, ⁊ sayest: Ierusalē shal not be geuē in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, ⁊ hopest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētiles (whom my progenitours cōquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow thy goddesses? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezech, ⁊ the childrē of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, ⁊ the kinge of Arphad, ⁊ the kinge of the cite Sepharnaim, Ena and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued ⁊ lettre of the messaungers, ⁊ red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, ⁊ opened the lettre before ⁊ LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vpō Cherubin. "Thou art the God, that only is God of all the kingdomes of the worlde,^a for thou only hast created hauē & earth. Encline thine eare LORDE & cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) & se, and pondre all the wordes of Sēnacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blasphemē the, the luyngge God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all kingdomes & londes, & cast their goddes in the fyre. Notwithstōdinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therefore haue they destroyed them. Delyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, & all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art & LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saith & LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answer, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, & mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Ierusalem.^c But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? ^dAnd agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, & exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blasphemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thy self: I couer the hie mountaynes, & sydes of Libanus with my horsmen. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees & the fayrest Fyrre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it & in to the chefest of his timbre woddēs. Yf there be no water, I wil graue & drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the fete of myne hooste. Yee (saist thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in honde, & brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waist, destroye, & bringe the stronge cities vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitants shalbe like lame men, brought in feare & confounded. They shalbe like the grasse & grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpō house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

rynge in thy nose, & a bridle byt in the chawes of the, & turne the aboute, euē the same waye thou camest. I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yere shalt thou eate that is kepte in stoare, & the next yere such as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yere ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vynyards, and enioye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Iuda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnant shal take rote beneth, & bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of Ierusalē, & the remnaunte from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therefore thus saith the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the cite, and shal shute no arrowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this cite, saith the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the cite (saith he) for myne owne, & for my seruante Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth,^f and slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thousande.^g And when men arose vp early (at Ierusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Ninieue. Afterwarde it chaunced, as he prayed in the Tēple of Nesrah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slewe him with the swearde, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

NOT longe afore this, was Ezechias dead-sick: ^hAnd the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne house in ordre, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face towarde the wall, & prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in the treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasaunt to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Thē sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth & this worde: ⁱI haue herde

"And take the this token of the LORDE, y he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Ahas Diall, y now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuyng, which Ezechias kinge of Iuda wrote, when he had bene sicke, & was recouered.

C I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cottage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weeuier cutteth of his webb.

Whyl I was yet takinge my rest, he hewed me of, & made an ende of me in one daie.

I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brussed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then chatred I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a doue.

I lift vp myne eyes in to y hight: O LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou surtief for me.

D What shal I speake or saye, that he maye this doo? y I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytternesse, & all my life must I passe ouer therin: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cōuersacion hath so pleased y, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes beynde thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe in to the graue, prayse not thy treuth: but the lyuynge, yee the lyuynge acknowledge the, like as I do this daye.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A T the same tyme Merodach Baladā,^a Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he vnderstode, how that he had bene sick, & was recouered agayne. "And Ezechias was glad therof, & shewed them the cōmodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyes & rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, & so thorow out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Thē came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue y men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre cōuntre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyn house? Ezechias answerde: All that is in myne house, haue they sene: and there is nothinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Vnderstode the worde of the LORDE of hostes, Beholde, the tyme wil come, that euery thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothinge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne counsell, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulness in my tyme.

hath receaued of the LORDES honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth: ^aPrepare y waye for the LORDE in the wyldernes, make straight y path for oure God in the deserte. Let all vailleis be exalted, and euery mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne felde. ^bFor the glory of the LORDE shal appeare, & all flesh shal se it, for why, y mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake: Now crie. And I sayde: what shal I crie? Then spake it: that, all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie therof, is as the floure of the felde.^c When the grasse is wyththered, the floure falleth awaye. Euen so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. Neuerthelesse whether the grasse wyther, or the floure fade awaye:^d Yet the worde of oure God endureth for euer. Morouer the voyce cried thus: Go vp vnto the hill (o Sion) thou that bringest good tidinges, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Ierusalem. Lift it vp without feare, and say vnto the cities of Iuda: Beholde, youre God: beholde, the LORDE, euen the almightie shal come with power, & beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal fede his flock like an herdman.^e He shal gather the lambes together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, & shal kindly in-treate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heauen with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of y worlde in thre fyngers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? ^fWho hath re-fourmed the mynde of the LORDE? Or who is of his counsell to teach him? At whom hath he asked coucell, to make him vnderstode, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to en-structe him in the waye of vnderstodinge? Beholde, all people are in coparison of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge y the balaunce weyeth. Beholde, y lles are in comparison of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficiēt to minstre fyre for his offringe, and all the beastes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparison of him, are rekened, as nothinge, ^gyeue wayne vanite and emptynesse.

To whom then will ye lickē God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shal the caruer make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmith couer him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Morouer shal the ymage maker (y the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) seke out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, y moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? Hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnynge? Haue ye not bene enfourmed of this, sence the foundation of y earth was layde: That he sytteth vpon the Circle of the worlde, and that all the inhabitours of the worlde are in coparison of him, but as greshoppers: That he spredeth out the heauē as a coueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowne agayne, nether their stocke rooted agayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither & fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

To whom now will ye lickē me, & whom shal I be like, saith the holy one? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and conside. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. ^hFor there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Iacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye: My wayes are hyd from the LORDE, and my God knoweth not of my iudgmentes. Knowest thou not, or hast thou not herde, that the euerlastinge God, the LORDE which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor faynt, and that his wisdomme cannot be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the faynte? Who rayseth vp \hat{y} iuste from the rysinge of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Euen I the LORDE, ^a which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Euery man hath exorted his neyghboure, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder, τ the Ironsmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shalbe good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nailes, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruauunt: Iacob my electe sede of Abrahā my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the honde: For I called the from farre, τ saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruauunt: ^b I haue chosen the, τ wil not cast \hat{y} awaye: be not a frayde, for I wil be with \hat{y} . Loke not behinde \hat{y} , for I wil be thy God, to strēgth \hat{y} , helpe \hat{y} , τ to kepe \hat{y} with this right hōde of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shal come to confucion and shame: and thine aduersaries shalbe destroyed τ brought to naught. So that who so seketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish, τ so shall they that vndertake to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORDE τ God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saue vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afrayde thou litle worme Iacob, and thou despyed Israel: For I will helpe the, saith the LORDE, τ the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treadinge cart τ a new flale, \hat{y} thou mayest throsshe τ grynde the moun-taines, and bringe the hilles to poulder. Thou shalt fanne them, τ the wynde shal carie them awaye, τ the whyrlwynde shal scatere thē. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORDE, and shalt delite in praysinge the holyone of Israel.

When the thurstie and poore seke water τ C fynde none, ^c τ when their tunge is drie of thirst: ^d I geue it them, saith the LORDE. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, τ welles in the playne felde. I turne \hat{y} wildernes to ryuers, and the drie londe to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Boxe, Myrre and olyues. And in the drie, I set Fyrre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, \hat{y} they altogether maye se and marcke, perceauue with their hertes, τ conside: that the honde of the LORDE maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saith the LORDE) and bringe forth youre strōgest grounde, counceleth the kinge of Iacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges \hat{y} are past, what they be: let thē declare thē vnto vs, \hat{y} we maye take them to herte, and knowe them hereafter. Ether, let thē shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shalbe done hereafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege \hat{y} same, τ tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, τ youre makinge is of naught, but abhominacion hath chosen you. Neuertheles I haue waked vp one from the North, τ he shal come. And another from the East, which shal call vpō my name, τ shal come to the prynces, as the Potter to his claye, τ as \hat{y} Potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde \hat{y} afore? So wil we confesse τ saye, that he is righteous. But there is none that sheweth or declareth eny thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I wil first graite thē of Sion τ Ierusalem to be Euangelistes. But when I cōsidre: there is not one amonge thē \hat{y} prophecieth, nether (when I axe him) \hat{y} answereth one worde. Lo, wicked are they τ vayne, with the thinges also that they take in honde: yee wynde are they, and emptynesse, with their ymages together.

The xliij. Chapter.

A BEHOLDE now therefore, this is my seruau^t whom I will kepe to my self: ^amy electe, In whom my soule shalbe pacified. I will geue him my sprete, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equyte amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcryer, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in ^y stretes. A brussed rede shal he not breake, & the smoking flax shal he not quench: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgmēt. He shal nether be ouersene ner haistie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gētiles also shal kepe his lawes. ^bFor thus saith God the LORDE vnto him (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abrode, & set forth the earth with hir encrease: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwel therin) I the LORDE haue called ^y in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therefore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gētiles. ^cThat thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORDE, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

^dSynge therefore vnto the LORDE, a new songe of thākes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therin, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwel in them. Let the wildernes with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie downe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORDE, & magnifieng him amonge the Gētiles. The LORDE shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fresh man of warre. He shal roare and crie, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saith the LORDE) shulde I therefore be still, and kepe sylence for euer? I will crie like a trauelinge woman, and once wil I destroye, and deuoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, & drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth theron. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde in to a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fote path, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before thē, & the thinge ^y is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them. ^eAnd therefore let them conuerte, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, & saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

Heare, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre sightes to se (o ye blinde.) ^fBut who is blynder, thē my seruau^t? Or so deaf, as my messaungers, whom I sent vnto them? For who is so blynde as my people, & they ^y haue the rule of them? They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moch, and keptest nothinge: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. The LORDE be merciful vnto them for his rightuousnesse sake, that his worde might be magnified & prayed. But it is a myscheuous & wiked people. Their yonge men belonge all to the snare, & shal be shut in to preson houses. ^gThey shal be caried awaye captiue and no man shal lowse them. They shal be trodē vnder fote, ^h& no man shal labour to bringe the agayne. But who is he amonge you, ^y pondreth this in his mynde, ^y considreth it, & taketh it for a warnyng in tyme to come?

ⁱWho suffred Iacob to be trodden vnder fote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the LORDE? Now haue we synned agaynst him, and haue had no delite to walke in his wayes, nether bene obedient vnto his lawe. Therefore hath he poured vpon vs his wroothful displeasure, and strōge batell, which maketh vs haue to do on euery syde, yet will we not vnderstōde: He burneth vs vp, yet syncketh it not in to oure hartes.

The xliij. Chapter.

BUT now, the LORDE that made the (o Iacob) ^jand he that fashioned the (o Israel) saith thus: Feare not, for I will defende ^y. I haue called ^y by thy name, thou art myne owne. When thou wentest in the water, I was by the, that the strōge floudes shulde not pluck & awaye: When thou walkest in the fyre, it shal not burne &, and the flame shal not kindle vpon the. For I am the LORDE thy God, the holyone of Israel, thy Sauoure. I gaue Egipte for thy delyuerance, the Moryās and the Sabees for the: because thou wast deare in my sight, and because I set by the, and loued the. ^a I pilled all men for the, and delyuered vp all people for thy sake, ^b that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy sede from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: For thē haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

B Bringe forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, ^c deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shall declare soch thinges, & tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesss, so shal they be fre: for thē men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesss (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruantes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shalbe none after me. ^d I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauoure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no strange God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, ^e that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man change.

C Thus saith the LORDE the holy one of Israel youre redemer: ^f For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, ^g and a footpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

^h Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarde nothinge that is past. Therefore beholde, I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shall it appeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agaane.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and ryuers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshippe me: the dragon, and the Estrich. ⁱ For I shall geue water in & wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drike to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Iacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vnlust towarde me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beastes for burntofferings, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourest the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. ^k Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrages, nether greuous in Incense.

^l But thou hast ladē me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynnes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selves sake do awaye thine offences, & forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembrance (for we will reason together) & shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. ^m Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. Therefore I ether suspended, or slewe the chefest prynces: I dyd curse Iacob, and gaue Israel in to reprove.

The xliiij. Chapter.

So heare now, o Iacob my seruaut, and ⁿ Israel whom I haue chosē. For thus saith the LORDE, that made the, fashioned the, and helped the, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not afrayde (o Iacob my seruante,) thou rightuous, whom I haue chosen. ^o For I shal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the thurstie. poure my sprete vpon thi sede, and myne encrease vpō thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grasse, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Iacob. The thirde shal subscriue with his honde vnto ꝑ LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

B Morouer, thus hath the LORDE spokē: ^aeuē the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, ꝑ LORDE of hoostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but wayne, and their laboure lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can neither se ner vnderstonde) they shalbe confounded. ^bWho shulde now make a god, or fashiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felaschipe of thē must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smyth taketh yron, and tempred it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, & maketh it with all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter C (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and spreadeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, ad squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and accordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Morouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himself, ad soch as the rayne hath swelled, which wodde serueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honour it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One peece he burneth in the fyre, with another he rosteth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

^dYet men nether conside ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not se: and their hertes, that they can not perceaue. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one peece in the fyre, I haue baked bred with ꝑ coles there of, I haue roasted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of wodd? The keepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Cōsidre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruauēt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ꝑ agayne vnto me, & I will delyuer ꝑ.

Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE E hath made, let all ꝑ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddes, with all the trees that are in you: for ꝑ LORDE shal redeme Iacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, euē he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

But I set vp the purpose of my seruauentes, and fulfil the counsel of my messaügers. I saye to Ierusalē: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the

The xlv. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cyrus his anoynted,^a whom he ledeth by \hat{y} right hōde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, \hat{y} they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, τ burst the yron barres. I shall geue the the hyd treasure, τ the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, \hat{y} ^bI the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Iacob my seruauant sake, τ for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, ^cbefore whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, ^dor euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goynge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. ^eFor I am the LORDE, τ there is els none. It is I \hat{y} created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes florish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

B ^fWo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith \hat{y} claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, thy worke serueth for nothīge? Wo be vnto him, \hat{y} saith to his father: why begetteth thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one τ maker of Israel: Axe me of thynges for to come, concernynge my sonnes: and put me in remēbraunce, as touchynge the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, τ let out my prisoners: τ that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchautes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (with out whō there is none other God) shal be with the. ^gO how profounde art thou o God, thou God τ Sauoure of Israel? Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of erreure: (that is worshippers of Idols.) But Israel shalbe saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlasting saluaciō: They shal not come to shame ner confucion, worlde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE: ^heuen he that created heauen, the God \hat{y} made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, ⁱnether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Iacob: seke me. I am the LORDE, which whē I speake, declare the thinge that is rightuous and true. Let thē be gathered τ come together, let thē drawe nye hyther, \hat{y} are escaped of the people: Haue they eny vnderstandinge, ^jthat set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thē? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ^kād aske counsell one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge? Haue not I \hat{y} LORDE done it: without ^lm whom there is none other God? the true God and sauoure, ^mand there is els none but I? And therefore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, τ there is els none. I sweare by my self: out of my mouth cōmeth \hat{y} worde of rightuousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me, ⁿand all tinges shal swere by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my rightuousnes and

They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one peece in the fyre, I haue baked bred with ꝑ coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of wodd? The kepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Cōsidre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruāūt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ꝑ agayne vnto me, & I will deluyuer ꝑ.

E Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ꝑ be here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddos, with all the trees that are in you: for ꝑ LORDE shal redeme Iacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saieth the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: / I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

The xlv. Chapter.

¶ THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cirus his anyoynted,^a whom he ledeth by y^e right hōde : that the people maye fall downe before him : I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, y^e they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, & burst the yron barres. I shall geue the the hyd treasure, & the thyng which is secretly kepte : that thou mayest knowe, y^e ^bI the God of Israel haue called the by thy name : and that for Iacob my seruauant sake, & for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me : Euen I the LORDE, ^cbefore whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, ^dor euer thou knewest me : that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. ^eFor I am the LORDE, & there is els none. It is I y^e created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble : Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thynges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

¶ Wo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith y^e claye to the potter : What makest thou ? or, thy worke serueth for nothynge ? Wo be vnto him, y^e saith to his father : why begetteth thou ? And to his mother : why bearest thou ? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one & maker of Israel : Axe me of thynges for to come, concernynge my sonnes : and put me in remēbraunce, as touchynge the workes of my hōdes : I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, & let out my prisoners : & that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer : The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (with out who there is none other God) shal be with the. ^aO how profounde art thou o God, thou God & Sauoure of Israel ? Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure : go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of erreure : (that is worshippers of Idols.) But Israel shalbe saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlasting saluaciō : They shal not come to shame ner confucion, worlde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE : ^eeuen he that created heauen, the God y^e made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth : I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited : Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly,^f nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Iacob : seke me. I am the LORDE, which whē I speake, declare the thyngs that is rightuous and true. Let thē be gathered & come together, let thē drawe nye hyther, y^e are escaped of the people : Haue they eny vnderstandynge,^g that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thē ? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ad aske counsell one at another, and shewe forth : What is he, that tolde this before ? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge ? Haue not I y^e LORDE done it : without ^hwhom there is none other God ? the true God and sauoure,ⁱ and there is els none but I ? And therefore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, & there is els none. NEUERTHELES Bel shal fall,^a ⁊ Nabo shalbe broken: whose ymages are a burthē for the beastes and catell, to ouerlade thē, and to make them weery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therefore must they go in to captiuyte.

Herken vnto me, o house of Iacob, and all ye that remaine yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from youre byrth, till ye were growen: I I which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also norish you, beare you and saue you. Whom will ye make me like, in fashion or ymage, that I maye be like him? ^bYe fooles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a gold-smyth to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshipe it. ^cYet must he be taken on mens shulders and borne, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and delyuereth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

B Consider this well, and be ashamed, Go in to youre owne selues (O ye runnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, sence the begynnyng of the worlde: that I am God, and that there is els no God, yee and ꝑ there is nothinge like vnto me. In the begynnyng of a thinge, I shewe the ende therof: and I tel before, thinges that are not yet come to passe. With one worde is my deuyce accomplished, ⁊ fulfilleth all my pleasure. I call a byrde out of the east, ^dand all that I take in honde, out of farre countrees. As soone as I commaunde, I bringe it hither: ^eas soone as I thinke to deuyse a thinge, I do it.

Heare me, o ye that are of an hie stomach, but farre from rightuousnesse. I shal bringe forth my rightuousnesse, It is not farre, and my health shal not tarie longe awaye. I wil laye health in Siō, and geue Israel my glory.

BUT as for the (O daughter, thou virgin Babylon) thou shalt syt in the dust. Thou shalt syt vpon the grouēde, and not in a trone (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasait. Thou shalt bringe forth the querne, ⁊ grynede meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. ^fThy shame shalbe discouered, ⁊ thy preynties shal be sene. The xliiij. Chapter.

HEARE this, O thou house of Iacob: ye are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of one stocke with Iuda: which sweare by the name of the LORDE, and beare witness by the God of Israel (but not with treuth and right) which are called fer men of the holy citie, as they that loke for conforth in the God of Israel, whose name is the LORDE of hostes.

The thinges that I shewed you euer sence the begynnynge: Haue I not brought the to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them? And they are come? Howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I haue euer sence the begynnynge shewed the of thinges for to come, and declared the vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Idol hath done it, my carued or cast ymage hath shewed it. Heare & conside all these thinges, whether it was ye that prophesied the: But as for me, I tolde the before at the begynnynge, new & secrete thinges, which thou knewest not of: And some done now not of olde time, wherof thou neuer herdest, before they were brought to passe: that thou canst not saye: I knewe of them. Morouer there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether haue they bene opened vnto thine eares afore tyme. For I knew that thou woldest maliciously offende, therefore haue I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I haue withdrawn my wrath, and for myne honours sake I haue ouersene the, so that I haue not rooted the out. Beholde I haue poured the, and not for moneye. I haue chosen the in the fyre of pouerte, And that only for myne owne sake, for I geue myne Honoure to none other, that thou shuldest not despise me. Herken vnto me o Iacob,^a & Israel whō I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am first and the last.^c My honde is the foundation of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called the they were there. Gather you all together, and herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon, (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme? I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thige darckly? sence the begynnynge? whē a thige begynneth, I am there.

Wherefore the LORDE God with his sprete hath sent me, And thus saieith the LORDE thine avenger, the holyone of Israel: I am the LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable thinges, and lede the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my cōmaundement, thy welthynes shalbe as the water streame: & thy rightuousnes as the waves flowinge in the see. Thy sede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and escape the Caldees with a mery voyce. This shalbe spoken of, declared abroad, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Iacob, that they suffred no thurst, whē they trauallyed in the wilderness. He claue the rockes a sonder, and the water gushed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saieith the LORDE.^d

A THUS saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of youre mothers deuorcemēt, that I sent vnto her? ^a or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offēces are ye solde: ^b ¶ because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsakē. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? ¶ when I called, no man gaue me answer. Was my hōde clene smyte of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to delyuer? ^c lo, at a worde I drike vp the see, ¶ of water floudes I make drie lōde: so ^d y for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. ^e As for heauen, I clooth it with darcknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

B The LORDE God hath geuē me a wel lerned tūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled, ^f yee ¶ y in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in ^g mornynge (as ^h scolemasters do) ⁱ y I might herke. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therefore cā I not saye naye, ^j ner with drawe my self, but I offre my backe vnto ^k y smyters, and my chekes to the nyppers. I turne not my face frō shame ad spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therefore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt stone, for I am sure, that I shal not come to confucion. Myne aduocate speaketh for me, who wil then go with me to lawe? Let vs stōde one agaynst another: yf there be eny that wil reason with me, let him come here forth to me. Beholde, the LORDE God stonde with me, ^l what is he that can condemne me? lo, they shalbe all like as an olde cloth, ^m which ⁿ y mothes shal eate vp.

C Therefore who so feareth the LORDE amōge you, let him heare the voyce of his seruāūt. Who so walketh in darcknesse, ¶ no light shyneth vpō him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kyndled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: Ye walke in the glistrige of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kyndled. A HERKEN vnto me, ye that holde of righteousness, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the graue wherout ye are digged. ^p Considre Abraham youre father, ¶ Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, ¶ increased him: how the LORDE confortd Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a Paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to apere: It shal not perish, ꝑ it shulde not be able to destroye, nether shal it fayle for faute of norishinge. I am the LORDE thy God, that make the see to be still,^b and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hoostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and defende the with the turnynge of my honde: that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundations of the earth, and saye vnto Sion: thou art my people.

Awake, Awake, and stonde vpo Ierusalem, 'thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast drunkē out the cuppe of his wrath; thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombringe cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast norished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Yee, destruction, waistinge, hunger & swerde: but who hath confortd the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at ꝑ heade of euery strete like a takē venyson, & are ful of ꝑ terrible wrath of ꝑ LORDE, & punyshmēt of thy God. And therefore thou miserable & drunkē (howbeit not with wyne) Heare this: Thus saith thy LORDE: thy LORDE & God, ꝑ defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take ꝑ slōbrige cuppe out of thy hōde, euē ꝑ cuppe with the dregges of my wrath: ꝑ frō hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, & wil put it ī their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy body eawē with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

The liij. Chapter.

VP Sion vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o Ierusalē, thou citie of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shake the frō the dust, arise & stonde vp, o Ierusalē. Pluck out thy neck from the bōde, o thou captiue daughter Sion. For thus saith the LORDE: ^dYe are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: 'My people wēte downe afore tyme in to Egipte, there to be straungers. Afterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse thē, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith ꝑ LORDE) ꝑ my people is frely caried awaye, ^e brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemed? saith the LORDE. ^fBut ꝑ my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the fete of the Embassitoure, ꝑ bringeth the message frō the mountayne, ^g & proclameth peace: ꝑ brigeth the good tydings, & preacheth health, & saith vnto Sion: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmē shal lift vp their voyce, with loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Sion.

Be glad, 'o thou desolate Ierusalē, & reioyce together: for the LORDE will cōforte his people, he wil deliuer Ierusalē. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme,^h & shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gētiles, & all the endes of the earth shal se the sauynge health of oure God. 'Awaye, Awaye, get you out frō thence, & touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amonge soch, And be cleane, ye that beare the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sediciō, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, ⁱ & ad the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruauant shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted & greatly honoured. Like as ꝑ multitude shal wōdre vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed & not as a mans face, & his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gētiles loke vnto him, & ꝑ kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. For they ꝑ haue not bene tolde of him, shal se him: "and they ꝑ herde nothinge of him, shal beholde him.

The liij. Chapter.

BUT who geueth credence vnto oure preaching? ^aOr to whō is the arme of the LORDE knowne? He shal growe before the LORDE like as a bräuch, ⁊ as a rote in a drie grounde. He shal haue nether bewty ner fauoure. When we loke vpon him, there shalbe no fayrnesse: we shal haue no lust vnto him. ^bHe shalbe the most symple ⁊ despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes ⁊ infirmities. We shal reken him so symple ⁊ so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces frō him. ^cHowbeit (of a treuth) he only taketh away oure infirmite, ⁊ beareth oure payne: ^dYet we shal iudge him, as though he were plagued and cast downe of God: where as he (not withstōdinge) shal be wōuded for oure offences, ⁊ smytten for oure wickednes. For the payne of oure punyshmēt shalbe layde vpon him, ⁊ with his stripes shal we be healed.

B As for vs, we go all astraye (like shepe), euery one turneth his owne waye. But thorow him, the LORDE pardoneth all oure synnes. He shal be payned ⁊ troubled, and shal not opē his mouth. ^eHe shalbe led as a shepe to be slayne, yet shal he be as still as a lambe before the shearer, ⁊ not open his mouth. He shal be had awaye, his cause not herde, ⁊ without eny iudgment: Whose generacion yet no man maye nombre, when he shalbe cut of frō the grounde of the lyvinge: Which punyishment shal go vpon him, for the transgression of my people. ^fHis graue shalbe geuē him with the cōdemned, ⁊ his crucifenge with the theues, ^gWhere as he dyd neuer violence ner vnright, nether hath there bene eny disceatfulnesse in his mouth.

C Yet hath it pleased ^hthe LORDE to smyte him with infirmite, ⁱthat when he had made his soule an offeringe for synne, he might se a lōge lastinge sede. And this device of the LORDE shal prospere in his honde. With trauallye and labour of his soule, shal he optayne greate riches. My rightuous seruauant shall with his wisdomē iustifie ⁊ delyuer the multitude, for he shal beare awaye their synnes. ^jTherefore wil I geue him the multitude for his parte, ⁊ he shal deuyde the strōge spoyle because he shal gene ouer his soule to death, ^k⁊ shalbe rekened amonge the transgressours, which neuertheles shal take awaye ^lsynnes of the multitude, and make intercession for the myszdoers.

The liij. Chapter.

THEREFORE be glad now, thou barē that bearest not. Reioyce, synge ⁊ be mery, thou ^mart not with childe: For the desolate hath moo children, ⁿthen the married wife, saith the LORDE. Make thy tente wyder, ⁊ sprede out the hangings of thine habitaciō: spare not, laye forth thy coardes, and make fast thy stakes: for thou shalt breake out on the right syde and on the left, ⁊ thy sede shal haue ^ogētiles in possession, and dwel in the desolate cities. Feare not, for thou shalt not be confounded: Be not ashamed, for thou shalt not come to confucion. Yee thou shalt forget the shame off thy youth, and shalt not remembre the dishonoure of thy weddowheade. For he that made the, shalbe thy LORDE, ⁊ husbonde (whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) ^p⁊ thine avenger shalbe euen the holy one off Israel, the LORDE of the whole worlde. For the LORDE shal call the, beinge as a desolate soroufull woman, and as a yonge wife that hath broken hir wedlocke: saith thy God.

A litle while haue I forsaken the, ^qbut with greate mercifulnes shal I take the vp vnto me. Whē I was angrie, I hid my face from the for a litle season, but thorow euerlastinge goodnesse shal I pardon the, saith the LORDE thine avenger. And this must be vnto me, as the water of Noe: For like as I haue sworne ^r⁊ I wil not bringe the water off Noe eny more vpon the worlde: ^sSo haue I sworne, ^t⁊ I wil neuer be angrie with the, ner reprove the: The mountaynes shall remoue, ⁊ the hilles shal fall downe: but my lōyngē kyndnesse shal not moue, and the bonde off my peace shal not fall downe frō ^u⁊, saith ^vthe LORDE thy mercifull loue.

Beholde, thou poore, vexed ⁊ despised: ^wI wil make thy walles of precious stones, ^x⁊ thy fundaciō of Saphires, thy wyndowes off Cristall, thi gates of fyne cleare stone, ⁊ thy borders of pleasauit stones. Thy childrē shal right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concernynge right iudgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherefore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not? we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

B Beholde, when ye fast, youre lust remaineth still: for ye do no lesse violence to youre detters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to smyte him with youre fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be herde aboue. ^aThynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wryth his heade aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, & to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastinge, or a daye ^ȝ pleaseth ^ȝ LORDE? But this fastinge pleaseth not me, till ^ȝ tyme be thou lowse him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the oath of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. ^dIt pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bred to the hongrie, & brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face frō thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as ^ȝ mornynge, and thy health florish right shortly: thy rightuousnesse shal go before the, and ^ȝ glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answer the: yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy fyngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refreszsheth ^ȝ troubled soule: ^eThen shal thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shalbe as the noone daye. The LORDE shal euer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl thy bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene waist, shalbe buyded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundation for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vp of hedges, and ^ȝ buylder agayne of ^ȝ waye of the Sabbath.

^a Yee yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaunt, holy & glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in honoure: so ^ȝ thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. Thē shalt thou haue thy pleasure in ^ȝ LORDE, which shal carie ^ȝ hie aboue ^ȝ earth, & fede the with the heretage of Iacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

The liij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, the LORDES honde is not ^a so shortened ^ȝ it can not helpe, nether is his eare so stopped ^ȝ it maye not heare. But youre myszdedes haue separated you from youre God, & youre synnes hyde his face from you, ^ȝ he heareth you not. For youre hondes are defyled with bloude, ^dand youre fyngers with vnrighteousnesse: Your lippes speake lesynges, & youre tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteousnes, & no mā iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, cōceaueth weerynesse, & bringeth forth euell. ^eThey brede cockatrice egges, & weene ^ȝ spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon thē, there cōmeth vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, & they maye not couer thē with their labours. Their dedes are ^ȝ dedes of wickednes, & ^ȝ worke of robbery is in their hōdes. Their fete runne to euell, & they make haist to shed innocēt bloude. ^mTheir cōuēls are wicked cōuēls, harme & destrucciō are in their wayes. But ^ȝ waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equyte, their wayes are so croked, ^ȝ who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is ^ȝ cause ^ȝ equite is so farre frō vs, & ^ȝ rightuousnes cōmeth not nye vs. ^aWe loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for ^ȝ mornynge shyne, se, we walke in ^ȝ darke. We grope like ^ȝ blynde vpon ^ȝ wall, we grope euen as one ^ȝ hath none eyes. We stamble at ^ȝ noone daye, as though it were toward night: in ^ȝ fallinge places, like men ^ȝ are half deed. We roare all like Beeres, & mourne stil like doues. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre frō vs. For oure offences are many before y, & oure synnes testifie agaynst vs. Yee we must cōfesse y we offende, & knowlege, y we do amysse: Namely, transgresse & dyssemble agaynst y LORDE, & fall away frō oure God: vsinge presūptuous & traytorous ymaginacions, & casting false matters in oure hertes. And therefore is equitye gone asyde, & righteousnes stōdeth farre of: ^atreuth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee y treuth is lade in preson, and he that refrayneth himself frō euil, must be spoyled.

^c When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, y there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightuousnes. ^eHe put rightuousnes vpō him for a brest plate, & set the helmet of health vpō his heade. He put on wrath in steade of clothe, & toke gelousy aboute him for a cloke: (like as when a man goeth forth wrothfully to recōpence his enemies, & to be avenged of his aduersaries.) Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the Ilōdes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risynge of the Sōne: and his magesty, vnto the goynge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. ^dBut vnto Sion there shal come a redemer, and vnto them in Iacob that turne from wickednesse, saith the LORDE. I will make this couenaunt with them (sayeth y LORDE): My sprete that is come vpon the, & the wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of y mouth of thy childrē, no ner out of y mouth of thy childers childrē, from this tyme forth for euer more.

The li. Chapter.

^a AND therefore get the vp by tymes, for thy light cometh, & the glory of y LORDE shal ryse vp vpō y. For lo, while y darknesse & cloude couereth the earth & the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light, & his glory shal be sene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light, & kynges to the brightnes y springeth forth vpō y. Lift vp thine eyes, & loke rounde aboute the: All these gather thē selues, & come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto y from farre, & daughters shal gather thē selues to the on euery side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shalbe opened: when the power of the see shalbe cōuerted vnto the (that is) whē the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer y, the Dromedaries of Madiā and Ephā. All they of Saba shal come, ^bbringinge golde & incense, & shewinge the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cedar shalbe gathered vnto y, the rāmes of Nabaioth shal serue the, ^cto be offred vpō myne auter, which I haue chosen, & in the house of my glory which I haue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloudes, and as the doues fliege to their wyndowes?

The lles also shal gather thē vnto me, and specially the shippes of y see: that they maye bringe the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the. ^dStraungers shal buylde vp thy walles, and their kiges shal do the seruyce. For when I am angrie, I smyte the: and when it pleaseth me, I pardon the. Thy gates shal stonde open still both daye and night, ^eand neuer be shut: that the hooste of the Gentiles maye come, and that their kinges maye be brought vnto the. For euery people & kingdome that serueth not the, shal perish, and be destroyed with the swerde. The glory of libanus shal come vnto the: The Fyrre trees, Boxes & Cedres together, to garnish the place of my Sanctuary, for I wil glorifie the place of my fete.

Morouer those shal come knelinge vnto the, y haue vexed the: & all they that despised y, shal fall downe at thy fote. Thou shalt be called the cite of the LORDE, the holy Sion of Israel. The lxi. Chapter.

THE sprete of the LORDE God is with me, ^efor ^fƿ LORDE hath anoynted me, & sent me, to preach good tydynges vnto the poore, ^gƿ I might bynde vp ^hƿ wounded hertes, ⁱƿ I might preach delyueraunce to ^jƿ captiue, & open the preson to the that are bounde: ^kƿ I might declare ^lƿ acceptable yere of ^mƿ LORDE, & the daye of ⁿƿ avēgeaunce of oure God: that I might comforte all them that are in heynesne, ^othat I might geue vnto them ^pƿ mourne in Sion, bewty in the steade of ashes, ioyful oymtmet for sighinge, pleasaunt raymet for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a plātinge of the LORDE ^qfor him to reioyce in.

They shal buylde the lōge rough wildernes, & set vp ^rƿ olde deserte. They shal repayre the waist places, & soch as haue bene voyde thorow out many generaciōs. Straigers shal stōde & fede youre catel, & the Aleauntles shalbe youre plowmē & reapers. But ye shalbe named the prestes of the LORDE, ^sƿ & mē shall call you the seruantes of oure God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of ^tƿ Gētiles & tryūphe in their substaūce. For youre greate reprofē & shame, shal they haue ioye, ^uƿ ye maye haue parte with the. For they shal haue dubble possession in their lōde, & euerlasting ioye shalbe with them. ^vFor I the LORDE, which loue right & hate robbery (though it were offred me) shal make their workes ful of faithfulness, & make an euerlasting couenaunt with them.

Their sede also and their generacion shal be knowne amōge the Gentiles, and amōge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of ^wƿ LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, & my soule reioyseth in my God. For ^xhe shall put vpon me the garnēt of health, & couer me with the mātē of rightuousnes. He shal decke me like a brydegrome, & as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpō her. For like as ^yƿ grounde bringeth forth frute, & as the gardē shuteth forth sede: So shal the LORDE God cause rightuousnes, and the feare of God to florish forth before all the Heithen.

The liij. Chapter.

FOR Sions sake therfore wil I not holde ^zmy tūge, & for Ierusalēs sake I will not cease: vntill their rightuousnes breake forth as ^{aa}ƿ shyninge light, & their health as a burnyng lampe. Then shal the Gētiles se thy rightuousnesse & all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a new name, which the mouth of ^{ab}ƿ LORDE shal shewe. The lxiij. Chapter.

WHAT is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) & cometh in so neebly with all his strēgh? I am he y teacheth rightuousnes, & am of power to helpe. Wherefore thē is thy clothinge reade, & thy raymēt like his y treadeth in y wyne presse? I haue troddē the presse my self alone, & of all people, there was not one with me. Thus haue I troddē downe myne enemies in my wrath,^a and set my fete vpō them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpō my clothes, & so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeauce that I haue takē in honde, & the yeare of my delyueraunce is come. I loked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe. I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. Thē I helde me by myne owne arme, & my feruētnesse susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodness of the LORDE, yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greate good y he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & acordinge to the multitude of his louynge kindneses. For he sayde: These no doute wilbe my people, and no shrekinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. In their troubles he forsoke thē not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redeemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vp euer, sence the worlde begāne. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemy, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbred he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holy sprete amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had deuyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an horse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stamble. The sprete of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauē,^c and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, y thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy louynge kyndnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? Yet art thou oure father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redemer, and thy name is euer lastinge.^d O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake y are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possessiō, for oure enemies haue takē it in: And we are become, euen as we were from the beginnyng: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

That thou mightest come downe with thy wonderous straunge workes, then shulde the hilles melt at thy presence. For sence the begynnyng of the worlde there was none (excepte thou o God) that herde or perceaued, nether hath eny eye sene what thou dost for thē, that put their trust in the.

Thou helpst him that doth right with cherefulnesse, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. ^aWe are all as an vnclene thinge, ⁊ all oure rightuousneses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leaf, for oure synnes carie vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stondest vp to take holde by the. Therefore hydest thou thy face from vs, and consumest vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, thou father of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not to sore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembrance, but conside that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, ^aSion is a wilderness, and Ierusalem a deserte. Oure holy house which is oure bewty, where oure fathers prayed the, is brent vp, yee all oure cōmodities and pleasures are waysted awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this? Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lrb. Chapter.

THEY shal seke me, that hitherto haue not axed for me: ^athey shal fynde me, that hither to haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vnfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginations: To a people, that is euer defyinge me to my face. ^fThey make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon alters of bricke, they lurck amonge the graues, and lie in the denues all night. ^eThey eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. Yf thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shalbe turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for euer. ^dBeholde, it is written before my face, ⁊ shal not be forgotten, but recōpensed. I shal rewarde it them in to their bosome: ⁱI meane youre mysdedes, and the mysdedes of youre fathers together (saith the LORDE) which haue made their smokes vpon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me vpon the hilles: therefore will I measure their olde dedes in to their bosome agayne.

Morouer thus saith the LORDE: ^blike as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men saye vnto him: breake it not of, for it is holy: Euen so will I do also for my seruauentes sakes, that I will not destroye them all. ^cBut I will take a sede out of Iacob, and out of Iuda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shal possesse these thinges, ⁊ my seruauentes shal dwell there. Saron shalbe a shepefolde, and the valley of Achor^m shal geue stallinge for the catell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill. Ye haue set vp an alter vnto fortune, ⁊ geuē rich drinckofferings vnto treasure. Therefore will I nombre you with the swerde, that ye shall be destroyed all together. ⁿFor when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye herkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thinge that pleased me not.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: ^oBeholde, my seruauentes shal eate, but ye shall haue hunger. Beholde, my seruauentes shal drynke, but ye shal suffre thurst. Beholde, my seruauentes shal be mery, but ye shal be cōfounded. Beholde, my seruauentes shal reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. ^pBut ye shal crie for sorow of hert, and cōplayne for vexacion of mynde. Your name shal not be sworne by amonge my chosen, for God the LORDE shal slaye you, and call his seruauentes by another name. ^qWho so reioyseth vpō earth, shall reioyse in the true God: And Who so sweareth vpō earth, shal swear in the true God. For the olde enemite shalbe forgotten, and taken awaye out of my sight. For lo, I shal make a new heauē, ^a & a new earth. And as for the olde, they shall neuer be thought vpō, ner kepte in mynde: but mē shalbe glad and euermore reioyse, for the thinges, that I shall do.

B For why: Beholde, I shal make a ioyfull Ierusalem, yee I my self will reioyse with Ierusalem, & be glad with my people: ^b And the voyce of wepinge and wayling shall not be herde in her from thēce forth. There shall neuer be childe ner olde man, that haue not their full dayes. But whē the childe cometh to an hūderth yeare olde, it shall dye. And yf he that is an hūderth yeare of age do wronge, he shalbe cursed. ^c They shal buylde houses, and dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, and eate the frute of them. They shall not buylde, & another possesse: they shall not plante, and another eate: ^d But the life of my people shalbe like a tre, and so shal the worke of their hondes.

My chosen shal lyue longe, they shall not labour in vayne, ner beget with trouble: for they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE, & their frutes with them. And it shalbe, that or euer they call, I shal answere them. ^e Whyلة they are yet but thinkinge how to speake, I shal heare them. The wolfe and the lambe shal fede together, and the lyon shal eate haye like the bullocke. But earth shalbe the serpetes meate. ^f There shal no man hurte ner slaye another, in all my holy hill, saith the LORDE.

The lxi. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, ^a and the earth is my fote stole. Where shal now the house stonde, & ye will buylde vnto me? And where shal be the place, & I wil dwel in? As for these thinges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saith the LORDE. Which of them shal I then regarde? Euē him that is of a lowly troubled sprete, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an oxe for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he & killeth a mā. He that killeth a shepe for me, choketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offringes, offreth swynes bloude: Who so maketh me a memoriall of Incense, prayseth the thinge & is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in honde, and their soule deliteth in these abhominacions.

^a Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in laughinge them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bringe vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answere: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, & chose the thinges that displease me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speaketh. ^b Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se youre gladnesse: & yet they shalbe cōfounded.

^c For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and recompēce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or euer she suffre the payne of the byrth and anguysh of & trauaile. Who euer herde or sawe soch thinges? doth the grounde beare in one daye? or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus sayeth the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, ^d and maketh baren? saith thy God. Reioyse with Ierusalem, & be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shal sucke cōforte out of hir brestes, and be satisfied. Ye shal taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I wil let ^e peace ī to her, like a water floude, & & might of the Heithē like a flowinge streame. Then shal ye sucke, ye shal be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpō hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shal I comforte you, and ye shalbe comforted in Ierusalem. ^f And when ye se this, youre herte shal reioyse, and youre bones shal florish like an herbe.

Thus shal the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruantes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shal come with fyre, and his charet shal be like a whyrlwynde, that he

A recitynge how Ierusalē was beseged, wonne, and taken.

THESE are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of Helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Ben Iamin:^a when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xj yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Iosias^b kinge of Iuda were ended: when Ierusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: ^cBefore I fasshioned the in thy mothers wōbe, I dyd knowe the: And or euer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. Thē sayde I:^d Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: ^eFor thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so euer I cōmaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wilbe with the, to delyuer the, saith the LORDE.

^fAnd with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde mourouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waist; and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plāte.

After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Ieremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I se a wakyng rodde.^g Then sayde ^hthe LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to perfourme it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? ⁱAnd I sayde: I do se a seethinge pot, lokinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north^j shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seate in the gates of Ierusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of those men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne hondes.

And therfore gyrde vp thy loynes,^k arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in cōmaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of thē. For beholde,^l this daye do I make the a strōge fensed towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of ^mstele agaynst ⁿthe whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: ^ofor I am with the, to delyuer the, saith the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE cōmaunded me thus: ^p"Go thy waye, crie in the eares of Ierusalē, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. ^qAll they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Iacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith ^rthe LORDE vnto you:

What vnfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye fro me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, ^sthe brought vs out of the lōde of Egipte: ^tthe led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. ^uAnd when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt welbuylded londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the cōmodities of the same: ^vye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

where is J LORDE? "They J haue the lawe in their hondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruyce vnto Baal, & folowe soch thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherefore I am constrainyd (sayeth the LORDE) to make my playmte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether soch thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themselves deale so falsly & vntruly with their goddes (which yet are no goddes in dede.^a) But my people hath geuen ouer their hie honoure, for a thinge that maye not helpe them.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afraide, & abashed at soch a thinge, saith the LORDE. For my people hath done two euels. "They haue forsakē me the well of the water of life, and digged them pites, yee vile and broken pites, that holde no water. Is Israel a bonde seruaunt, or one of the housholde?^a Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they roare and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? "They haue made his londe wayst, "his cities are so brent vp, that there is no man dwellinge in them. Yee the children of Noph and Taphanes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God,^c euer sence he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in J strete of Egipte? to drinke foule water? Either, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To drinke water of the floude? "Thine owne wickednesse shal reprove the, and thy turnynge awaye shal condemne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnderstonde, how euell and hurtful a thinge it is, J thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hoostes.

"I haue euer broken thy yock of olde, & bursten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, & amonge all grene trees: where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. "How art thou turned then in to a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge grape? Yee and that so sore: that though thou wasshest the with Nitrus & makest thiself to sauoure with that swete smellinge herbe of Borith: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. "Loke vpō thyne owne waies in the woddes, valles & dennes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast done. Thou art like a swift Dromedary, that goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Asse, that vseth the wildernesse, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his wil. Who can tame the? All they that seke the, shal not fayle, but fynde the in thyne owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fote from nakednes, and thy throte from thurst, and thinkest thus in thy self: tush, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & hange vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the dede, commeth to shame, euē so is the house of Israel come to confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. "For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answere thē: "Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? byd them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of nede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherefore thē wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. "Your owne swerde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Yf ye be the people of the LORDE, then herke vnto his worde: Am I thē become a wildernes vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherefore saith my people then: we are fallē of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir raymēt, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so lōge? Why boostest thou thy wayes so hylie, (to optayne fauoure there thorow) when thou hast yet stained them with blasphemies?

The iij. Chapter.

A COMONLY, when a man putteth away his wife, ^cand she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? ^dBut as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agayne to me, saieyth the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the stretes, and as a murtherer in the wilderness. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

^eThis is the cause, that the rayne and euenyng dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me fro my youth: Wilt thou then put me away, and cast me of for euer? Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Neuertheles, thou speakest soch wordes, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

B The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Iosias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shrēkinge Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, / and amonge all thicke trees, and there played the harlot? hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? ^fIuda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and gaue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lōde. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with stones and stockes.

Neuerthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda is not ^gturned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saieyth the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The bacsylder Israel is more rightuous, ^hthe vnfaithfull Iuda: and therefore go preach these wordes towarde the north, & saye: Thou shrenkinge Israel, turne agayne (saieyth the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saieyth the LORDE, & I will not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, ⁱ& hast made thy silf partaker of straunge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saieyth the LORDE.

^jO ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, saieyth the LORDE, and I wilbe married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amōge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will geue you hyrdmē after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wyszdome. Morouer, when ye be increased and multiplied in the londe, then (saieyth the LORDE) there shall nomore boost be made of the arke of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, neither shall eny man make mencion of it: for from thence forth it shall neither be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Ierusalem be called the LORDES seate, and all Heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDE sake, which shalbe set vp at Ierusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauwarde herte.

But like as a woman fayleth hir loue, so are ye vnfaithfull vnto me (o ye house of Israel) saith the LORDE. And therefore the voyce of the children of Israel was herde on euery side, wepinge and waylinge: ^bfor they haue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE.

O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale youre bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel stondesth only vpon God oure LORDE.

^cConfucion hath deuoured oure fathers labour from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters. So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and haue ^dnot obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God.

The iiii. Chapter.

O ISRAEL, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. And yf thou wilt put awaye thy abhominaciōs out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: ^eAnd shalt swear: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and rightuousnesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saith the LORDE, to all Iuda and Ierusalem: plowe youre londe, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

^fBe circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Iuda, ^gand all the indwellers of Ierusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, ^hq kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions.

Preach in Iuda and Ierusalem, crie out and speake: ⁱblowe the trompettes in the londe, crie that euery man maye heare, and saye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, spede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plague, and a greate destruction from the north. ^jFor the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dēne, that he maye make the londe waist, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therein. Wherefore gyrdye youre selues aboute with sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wrath of the LORDE shal not be withdrawn from you.

At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shalbe astonished, and the prophetes shalbe sore afrayed. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaued this people and Ierusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, ^kand now the swearde goeth thorow their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people ^lto Ierusalem: ^mthere commeth a warne wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clēse.

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he commeth downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: ⁿhis horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Ierusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, ^othat thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remayne with the?

For a voyce from Dan and from ^ph hill of Ephraim speaketh out, and tellethe of a destruction. Beholde, the Heithen geue Ierusalem warnyng, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are cōmyng from farre countrees. They tell the cities of Iuda the same also, they shall geue them warnyng in euery place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wrath, ^qsaith the LORDE.

eth within me, I can not be still, for I haue herde the crienge of the trompettes, and peales of warre.

They crie murthur vpon murthur, the whole londe shal perish. Immediately my tentes were destroyed, and my hangings, in the twinkle of an eye. How longe shall I se the tokens of warre, and heare the noyse of the trompettes?

Neuertheles this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, and hath vterly no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, and without eny discreciō. To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wissdome. I haue loked vpon the earth, and se, it is wast and voyde. I loked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therefore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboue: for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repente me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to woddes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therein.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? For though thou clovest thy self with scarlet, and deckest thy self with gold: though thou payntest thy face with colours, yet shalt thou trymme thy self in vayne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go aboute to slaye thee. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one laboringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the daughter Sion, that casteth out hir armes, and sowneth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my herte, for them that are slayne?

The 6. Chapter.

LOKE thorow Ierusalem, beholde and se: Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saith the LORDE). For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceau: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentaunce: thou hast correcte them for amendemēt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so symple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, and iudgmentes of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talke with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgmēt of oure God. But these (in like maner) haue broken the yock, and bursten the bondes in sonder.

Wherefore a lyon out of the wod shal hurte them, and a wolfe in the euenyng shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peces all them, that come therout. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in mariage, yet they fell to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned horse, euey man neyeth at his neighbours wife. Shulde I not correcke this, saith the LORDE?

Shulde I not be avenged of euey people, that is like vnto this? Clymme vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vterly: cut of their braunches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Iuda forsaken me, saith the LORDE. They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no misfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swearde ner hunger.

¶ As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, "yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thinges shal happen vnto them.

Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: "The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

"Lo, I will bringe a people vpō you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people whose speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstodest what they saye.

Their arrowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the sward.

¶ Neuertheles I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherefore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answereth them: because, that like as ye haue forsakē me, and "serued straunge goddes in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye serue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Iacob, & crie it out in Iuda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish and vndercrete people.) "Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Feare ye not me, saith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to lōke me in the face? "which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the wawes therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye fro me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth euer still the haruest for vs yearly.

¶ Neuertheles youre miszdedes haue turned these from you, " & youre synnes haue robbed

you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that priuely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. "Herof cometh their greate substaunce and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shameful blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, "they make no ende of the fatherlesses cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

"Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saith the LORDE? Shulde I not be avenged of all soch people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therin. What will come therof at the last?

The vi. Chapter.

COME out of Ierusalem, ye stronge childrē of Ben Iamin: "blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate misery pepeth out from the North.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hoostes commaunded.

vnto whom shal I speake? whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? ^aTheir eares are so vncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

Beholde, ^bthey take the worde of God but for a scorne, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE) that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. Yee the man must be taken prisoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wiues shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saith the LORDE. ^cFor from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

Thus saith the LORDE: go in to the stretes, conside and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therin, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therin) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therefore ye Gentiles, and thou congregacion shalt knowe, what I haue deuysed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, ^gI will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginacions.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and there shal fall from amonge them the father with the children, one neghboure shal perish with another.

Morouer thus saith ^jthe LORDE: Beholde, ^kthere shal come a people from the North, ^la greate people shal arise from ^mthe endes of ⁿthe earth, with bowes ^oand dartes shal they be weapened: It is a rough ^pand fearece people, an vnmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wel appointed to ^qbatell agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shal this crie be herde: Oure armes are feble, heuynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman traueling with childe. Noman go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemie shalbe on euery side.

Wherefore, gyrd a sack cloth aboute the (o thou daughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with aszshes, ^rmourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shal sodenly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellous are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the euel is not taken awaye from them. Therefore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

What? ^b thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a denne of theues? And these thinges are not done priuely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I my self rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answer. ^c And therefore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. ^d And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethren the whole sede of Ephraim.

^e Therefore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt nether geue thākes, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise wil I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Ierusalem? ^f The children gather stickes, the fathers kyndle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out drinkoffringes vnto straūge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: How be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpō the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: ^g Ye heape vp youre burnt-offringes with youre sacrifices, & eate ^h flesh. ⁱ But when I brought youre fathers out of Egipte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt-offringes and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, ^j and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue cōmaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

^k But they were not obedient, they inclyned not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymagynacions and after the mocions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egipte, vnto this daye.

^l Neuertheles, I sent vnto them my seruauantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herkē, ner offre me their eares, but were obstinate, and worse then their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wordes vnto them, but they shal not heare the: thou shalt crie vpon them, but they shal not answer the. Therefore shalt thou saye vnto them: this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. ^m Faithfulnes & treuth is cleue rooted out of their mouth.

ⁿ Wherefore cut of thine hayre, and cast it awaye, take vp a complainyte in the whole londe: for the LORDE shal cast awaye, and scatre the people, ^o y he is displeased withall.

^p For the children of Iuda haue done euell in my sight, saith the LORDE. They haue set vp their abhominacions, in the house ^q y hath my name, and haue defyled it. ^r They haue also buylded an aluter at Tophet, which is in the valley of ^s y childrē of Ennō: ^t y they might burne their sonnes and daughters, which I neuer cōmaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought. And therefore beholde, the dayes shal come (saith the LORDE) that it shal no more be called, Tophet, or ^u the valley of the children of Ennon, but the valley of

The viij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme, saieih the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Iuda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Ierusalē, shalbe brought out of their graues^d and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heavenly hooste: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought τ worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpon the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

^eAnd all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye thē to lyue: where so euer they remayne, τ where as I scatre them, saieih the LORDE of hoostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saieih the LORDE: Do men fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, $\frac{1}{2}$ they neuer conuerte? Wherefore then is this people and Ierusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not agayne? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

BFor I haue loked, and considered: ^fbut there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repētaunce for his synne, that will so moch as saye: wherefore haue I done this? But euery man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Storke knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledoue, $\frac{1}{2}$ Swalow and the Crane, cōsidre the tyme of their trauayle: ^gbut my people will not knowe the tyme of the punishment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afayed and taken: for lo, ^hthey haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue their wyues vnto aleautes, and their feldesto destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shamefull lucre: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies. ⁱNeuertheles, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Eye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yee they knowe of no shame.

^kWherefore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saieih the LORDE.

Morouer I will gather them in (saieih the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shalbe plucte of. C

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to sylence, and geuen vs water myxte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We loked for peace, and we fayre not the better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shal be afayed at the neyēge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and deuoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. ^lMorouer, I will sende Cockatrices τ serpētes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORDE.

Sorowe is come vpon me, and heynes vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the criēge of my people is herde from a farre countre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they greued me (shall the LORDE saye) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions? The harvest is gone, the Sōmer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heuy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no Phisician, that cā heale the hurte of my people.

The ix. Chapter.

Q WHO will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for myne eyes: that I maye wepe night & daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cottage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thē: for they be all aduoutrers and a shrenckinge sorte. They bēde their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the treuth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the worlde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith the LORDE.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, ^ano man maye safelye trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyne another, & one neyghboure begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no treuth. ^bThey haue practised their tūges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie thē, for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tūges are like sharpe arowes, ^cto speake disceate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neyghboure, but preuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punysh them for these thinges, saith the LORDE? ^dOr, shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? ^eVpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and sorowfull crie, and a mournynge vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there eny more: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

^fByrdes and catell are all gone from thēce. I will make Ierusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venomous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shal dwell therein. What man is so wise, as to vnderstonde this? Or to whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: ^gO thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brent vp, and like a wilderness, that no mā goeth thorow? Yee the LORDE himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepthe not the thyngs that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued ther-after: ^hbut folowed the wickednes of their owne hertes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE of hostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwod, and geue thē gall to drynke. ⁱI will scatere them also amonge the Heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a swearde amonge them, ^jto persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hostes: loke that ye call for mournynge wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mournynge songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyddes maye guszhe out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse herde of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye women) and let youre eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne youre daughters to mourne, and that euery one maye teach hir neyghboursse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deeth is clymmē vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the dore, & ^ky yonge man in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith ^lthe LORDE: The deed bodies of men shal lye vpon ^mthe ground, as the donge vpon the felde, ⁿand as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wisdom, ner the stronge man in his strength, ^onether the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstodeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and rightuousnes vpon earth. ^pTherefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saith \S LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, ^a the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wilderness. ^b For all \S Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

A HEARE the worde of the LORDE, \S he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, ^c and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the Heithen are afrayed of soch: Yee all the customes and lawes of the Gētiles are nothinge, but vanite. ^d They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the workeman, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it with nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. ^e Be not ye afrayed of soch, for they cā do nether good ner euel. But there is none like vnto \S (o LORDE) thou art greate, ^f and greate is the name of thy power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kige of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

B For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are all together vnlernd and vnwise, All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: ^g and golde from Ophir, a worke \S is made with the honde of the craftesman \S the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wyse men all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyuinge God, and an euerlastinge kinge. ^h Yf he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gētiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of thē: they are goddes, that made nether heauē ner earth: therefore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen.

ⁱ But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp \S cloudes from the vttemost partes of \S earth: ^j he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brighet forth the wyndes out of their treasures: ^k His wisdom maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, ^l for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. ^m The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Iacobs porciō is not soch: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put away thy vnclennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fashiō, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how panefull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōsidre this sorow by my self, \S I must suffre it, My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, \S can no where be founde. Now haue I none to sprede out my tente, or to set vp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with their catell, \S all are scatred abroad. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sediciō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wylder-nesse, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. ⁿ Now I knowe (o LORDE) that it is not in mā's power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes \S goinges. Therefore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fauoure, ^o and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe \S not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Iacob, and haue roted out his glory.

The xi. Chapter.

A THIS is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Ieremy for to preach, sayenge :

Hearre the wordes of the couenaunt, and speake vnto all Iuda, and to all them that dwel at Ierusalem, And saye thou vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto \hat{y} wordes of this couenaunt: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron forname, sayenge: \hat{a} Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you: \hat{b} so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, \hat{y} I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them \hat{a} londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in \hat{y} cities off Iuda and rounde aboute Ierusalem, and saye: Hearre the wordes off this cōuenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sence the tyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge: B herken vnto my voyce: \hat{a} Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor encline their eares vnto me, \hat{b} but folowed the wicked ymaginaciōs of their owne hertes. And therfore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this couenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foude out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Ierusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made with their fathers.

Therfore thus saith the LORDE: Be-holde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. \hat{c} The shal the townes off Iuda and the citisens off Ierusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblacios: \hat{d} but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. \hat{e} For as many cities as thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also: \hat{f} And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Ierusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. \hat{g} But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shameful greate blasphemies in my house? \hat{h} euen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, \hat{i} a fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abrode, he will burne the vp, \hat{j} ad destroye thy braunches. \hat{k} For the LORDE off hoostes that plated the, hath deuyed a plage for the (o thou house of Israel \hat{l} Iuda) for \hat{y} euel that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, D and understonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginacions. \hat{m} But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to be slayne: not knowinge, that they had deuyed such a counceyl agaynst me, sayenge: \hat{n} We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the lyuyng, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therfore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hoostes) \hat{o} thou righteous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therfore spake thus of the citisens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: \hat{p} Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Yourre yonge \hat{q} shal perish with the swearde, youre sonnes and youre doughters shal vtterly dye of hunger, so that none shal remaine. For vpon the citiesyns off Anathot wil I bringe a plague, and the yeaere of their visitacion.

The xij. Chapter.

A LORDE, thou art more rightuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. "How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offede and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, & proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house,^a and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

"The catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: tush, God wil not destroye vs vtterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne with horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Iordane? For thy brethren ad thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence.

B "Beleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hodes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therefore haue I forsaken it. "Myne heretage is vnto me, as a speckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

"Dyuerse hyrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yee the whole londe lieth waist, and no man regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for "the swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of $\frac{y}{l}$ lode to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynges, because of the greate wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne euel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Iuda from amonge them. "And whē I haue rooted the out, I wilbe at one with the agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lode. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne $\frac{y}{l}$ wayes of them, to swear by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to swear by Baal) the shal they be rekened amōge my people. "But yf they wil not obeye, the wil I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The xij. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye & get the a lynnyn breche, and gyrd it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a brech, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared & put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Vp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saith the LORDE: Euen so will I corruppe the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off

Ierusalē. " This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowe ſ̃ wicked ymaginacions off their owne hert, & hange vpon ſtraunge goddes, thē haue they ſerued & worshipped : and therefore they ſhalbe as this brech, that ſerueth for nothinge. For as ſtrately as a brech lieth vpon a mā's loynes, ſo ſtrately dyd I bynde ſ̃ whole houſe of Iſrael, and the whole houſe of Iuda vnto me, ſaieth the LORDE: ^a that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: ſ̃ they might be in honour: but they wolde not obeye me. Therefore laye this ryddle before them, and ſaye: Thus ſaieth the LORDE God of Iſrael: euery pot ſhal be fylled with wyne. And they ſhal ſaye: thinkeſt thou we knowe not, ſ̃ euery pot ſhalbe fylled with wyne? Then ſhalt thou ſaye vnto them: Thus ſaieth the LORDE: Beholde, I ſhal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde with dronckēnes, the kynges that ſyt vpon Dauid's ſtole, the preſtes and prophetes, with all ſ̃ dwell at Ierusalem. And I will ſhute them one agaynſt another, yee ſ̃ fathers agaynſt the ſonnes, ſaieth the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not ſpare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but deſtroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no diſdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himſelf that ſpeaketh. Honour ſ̃ LORDE youre God herein, or he take his light from you, and or euer youre fete ſtomble in darkneſſe at ſ̃ hill: leſt whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to ſ̃ ſhadowe and darkneſſe of death. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you ſecrete warnynge, I will mourne fro my whole herte for youre ſtubburneſſe. ^c Piteouſly will I wepe, and the teares ſhall guſzhe out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke ſhal be caried awaye captiue. Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble youre ſelues, ſet you downe lowe, for ſ̃ crowne of youre glory ſhal fall from youre heade. The cities toward the ſouth ſhalbe ſhut vp, & no man ſhal open thē. All Iuda ſhal be caried awaye captiue, ſo that none ſhall remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde thē, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke ſhal they fall vpon the. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou haſt taught thē thy ſelf, and made thē maſters ouer the. ^d Shall not ſorowe come vpon the, as on a woman trauelinge with childe? And yf thou woldeſt ſaye thē in thine hert: Wherefore come theſe thinges vpon me? Euē for the multitude of thy blaſphemies, ^e ſhall thy hynder partes & thy fete be diſcouered. For like as the man of Iude maye chaunge his ſkynne, & the cat of the mountayne hir ſpottes: ſo maye ye that be exerciſed in euell, do good. Therefore will I ſcate you, lyke as ſ̃ ſtobble that is takē awaye with ſ̃ ſouth wynde. This ſhal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre meaſure, wher with ye ſhal be rewarded of me, ſaieth the LORDE: becauſe ye haue forgotten me, and put youre truſt in diſceatful thinges. ^f Therefore ſhall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and diſcouer thy thees, that thy preuyties maye be ſene: thy aduoutrie, thy deadly malice, thy beaſtlynes and thy ſhamefull whordome. For vpon the feldeſ and hilles I haue ſene thy abhominacions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalē) whē wilt thou euer be clenſed enymore?

The iiii. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE ſhewed vnto Ieremy, cōcernynge the derth off the frutes.

IUDA ſhal mourne, men ſhall not go moch more thorow his gates: the londe ſhal be nomore had in reputacion, & the crie of Ierusalē ſhal breake out. The lordes ſhall ſende their ſeruauntes to fetch water, & when they come to the wellles, they ſhal fynde no water, but ſhal carie their veſſels home emptie. They ſhal be aſhamed & confounded, & ſhal couer their heades. ^g For the grouēde ſhalbe dried vp, becauſe there cōmeth no rayne vpon it. The plowmen alſo ſhalbe aſhamed, & ſhal couer their heades. The Hynde ſhal forſake the yonge fawne, that ſhe brigheth forth in ſ̃ felde, becauſe there ſhalbe no grasse. The wilde Aſſes ſhall ſtonde in the Moſſe, and drawe in their wynde like the Dragōs, their eyes ſhal fayle for wāt of grasse.

Doutles oure owne wickedneſſe rewarde vs: But LORDE do thou accordinge to thy name, though oure transgreſſions and synnes be many. ^h For thou art the comforte & helpe of Iſrael in the tyme of trouble. Why wilt thou be as a ſtraunger in the Londe, and as one that goeth ouer the felde, ād cōmeth in only to remayne for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a coward, and as it were a giāute that yet maye not helpe? For thou art ours (o LORDE) and we beare thy name, therefore forsake vs not.

B Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people [¶] I haue pleasure to go so nembly with their fete, and leaue not of, and therefore displease the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembraunce all their mysdedes, ād punysh all their synnes. Yee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. [¶] For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offrises & sacrifices, yet will not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swearde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: [¶] Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no hunger shall come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place.

C And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. [¶] I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende thē: yet they preach vnto you false visions, charmynge, vanite, and disceatfulness of their owne herte. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and [¶] I saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner hunger be in this londe: With swearde ād with hunger shal those prophetes perish, [¶] and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of hunger, ād be slayne with the swearde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) [¶] both they ād their wyues, their sonnes and their daughters. For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon thē. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceassing daye & night. [¶] For my people shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shall perish with a greate plage. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Yff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

Yee their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an vnknowne londe.

D Hast thou then vtterly forsaken Iuda? (sayde I) Dost thou so abhorre Siō? Or hast thou so plagued vs, that we can be healed no more? [¶] We loked for peace, and there cōmeth no good: for the tyme of health, & lo, here is nothing but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all oure mysdedes, and the synnes of oure fathers, that we haue offended [¶] I. Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, forget not thy louynge kyndnes: [¶] Remembre [¶] I trone of thyne honoure, breake not the couenaūt, that thou hast made with vs. [¶] Are there eny amonge the goddesses of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE oure God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these thinges.

The xlv. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE vnto me, ād sayde: [¶] Though Moses and Samuel stode before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryue them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: [¶] Whyther shal we go? Thē tell thē: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to hunger, some in to captiuyte. For I will bringe foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. [¶] The swearde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre ād beestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatere them aboute also in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses [¶] the sonne of Ezechias kinge of Iuda, for the thinges that he dyd in Ierusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Ierusalem? Who shal be sory for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? seinge thou goest fro me, ād turnest backward, saith the LORDE? Therefore I will stretch out myne honde agaynst the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatere the abroad in the fanne on euery side of the londe: [¶] I will waist my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sondes of the see. Vpon [¶] I mothers of their children, I shal bringe a destroyer in the noone daye.

The Sonne shall fayle her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and faynte for very heynesse. ^a As for those ^y remayne, I wil delyuer them vnto the swearde off their enemies, saith the LORDE. ^c O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, anemie and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet euery man speake euell vpon me. And ^y LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good? Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe ^y, when thine enemy oppresseth the? And I wil brige you with youre enemies in to a londe, ^e ^y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde I then) thou knowest all thinges, therefore remembre me, and viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in thy lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. ^f When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vpgredely: they haue made my hert ioyfull and glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God off hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scornors, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heynes endure for euer? Are my plagges then so greate, ^y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. ^g They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto the: and so shal I make the a strōge wall of stele agaynst this people. ^h They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuayle. For I my self will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Tirautes.

The xvi. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus sayde the LORDE ⁱ vnto me: Thou shalt take ^j no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their ^k fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dōge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and hunger, and their ^l bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace fro this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shall not be buried: no man shall bewepe them, no man shall clippe or shaue himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shall not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heynes for father and mother. ^m Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: ⁿ Beholde, I shall take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth and gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

^o Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefore hath the LORDE deuysed all this greate plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Therefore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue straunge goddes daye and night, there will I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therfore (saith the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall nomore be sayed: ^aThe LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lode of Egipite: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, ^g from all londes where I had scatred them. For I wil bringe the agayne in to the lode, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will sende out many fiszhers^c to take them, and after ^y wil I sende out many hunters to hunte the out, from all mountaynes and hilles ad out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd from my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stincking Idols and abhominacions, wherwith they haue fylled myne heretage. ^oThe LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therfore, I will once teach them (saith ^y LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, ^y my name is ^y LORDE.

The xviij. Chapter.

YOURE synne (o ye off the trybe of Iuda) is writte in the table of youre hertes, ^g graue so vpon the edges of youre altuers with a penne of yron ^g with an Adamat clawe: ^y youre children also maye thynke vpon youre altuers, woddess, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes ^g feldes. Wherefore, I will make all youre substaunce ^g treasure be spoyled, for the greate synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all ^y coostes off youre lode. Ye shal be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bodage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saith the LORDE: ^fCursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ad that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from ^y LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shall not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wildernes, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blissed is the man, ^e that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harme, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bringe forth frute. Amonge all thinges lyuynge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hart.

Who shall then knowe it? ^eEuen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, ad search the reynes and rewarde euery ma accordinge to his wayes, and accordinge to the frute off his counceils.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but bringeth forth no yonge: He commeth by riches, but not rightuously. In the myddest off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very foole. But thou (o LORDE) whose trone is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holy rest: Thou art the comforte off Israel. All they that forsake the, shalbe confounded: ^eall they that departe from the, shalbe written in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite of the waters of life.

Heale me (o LORDE) and I shall be whole: saue thou me, and I shalbe saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledynge

Let my persecuters be confounded, but not me: let them be afraied, and not me. Thou shalt bringe vpon the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right sore.

D Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: ^bGo and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Ierusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the wordes of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citesyns of Ierusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: ^cTake hede for youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Ierusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but halowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded youre fathers. ^dHow be it they obeyed me not, nether herkened they vnto me: but were obstinate & stubburne, ad nether obeyed me, ner receaued my correccion.

E Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saieth the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to ^e cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath: Yf ye will halowe the Sabbath, ^fso that ye do no worke there in: then shal there go thorow the gates of this cite, kinges and prynces, that shall syt vpon the stole of Dauid: They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ryde vpon horses, both they and their princes: Yee whole Iuda and all the citesyns of Ierusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited. There shall come men also from the cities of Iuda, from aboute Ierusalem, ad from ^glonde of Ben Iamin, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wilderness: which shall bringe burntofferings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre vp thankesgeuyng in the house of the LORDE. But yf ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare youre burthens thorow the gates off Ierusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I set fyre vpon the gates off Ierusalem, ad it shal burne vp the houses off Ierusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The xliij. Chapter.

This is another comunicacion, that God had with Jeremy, sayenge:

ARISE, and go downe in to the Potters house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hōdes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, accordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: ^hMaye not I do with you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saith the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.

ⁱWhen I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waist awaye eny people or kīgdome: yff that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) couerte from their wickednes: Immediately, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon the. ^kAgayne: Whē I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kīgdome: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Immediately, I repente of the good, that I deuysed to do for them.

Speake now therfore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agaynst you.

^lTherefore, let euery man turne from his euell waye, ^mtake vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: ⁿNo more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginacions, and do euery mā accordinge to the wilfulness of his owne mynde.

B Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Axe amonge the Heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the daughter of Sion hath done. Shal not ^osnowe (^p melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysture the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be

Let the noyse be herde out of their houses, when the murtherer cōmeth sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my fete. [¶] Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their coicell, that they haue deuyded, to slaye me. And therefore forgeue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltye: This shalt thou do vnto thē in [¶] tyme of thy indignacion.

The xix. Chapter.

[¶] MOROUER, thus saide the LORDE vnto Ieremy: Go thy waye, and bye the an erthen pytcher, and bringe forth the Senatours and chefe prestes in to the valley of the children off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of brick, [¶] shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ād ye citesyns of Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that [¶] eares of all that heare it, shal glowe. [¶] And that because they haue forsakē me, and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they, their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also with the bloude of innocentes, [¶] for they haue set vp an aluter vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt-offringe vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therfore, [¶] tyme cōmeth [¶] (saith the LORDE) [¶] this place shal nomore be called Tophet, ner [¶] valley of [¶] childrē of Ennō, but [¶] valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda [¶] Ierusalem, [¶] kill thē downe with the swearde in [¶] sight of their enemies, ād of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcasses wil I geue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, ād despysed: that [¶] who so goeth there by, shal be abashez [¶] geast vpon her, because of all hir plages.

I will fede them also with the flesh [¶] of their sonnes [¶] their daughters. Yee [¶] euery one shal eate vp another in the beseginge [¶] straytnesse, wher with their enemies ([¶] seke their lyues) shal kepe thē in. And the pitcher shalt thou breake in the sight of the mē, [¶] shalbe with the, and saye vnto thē: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes: [¶] Euē so wil I destroye this people [¶] cite: as a Potter breaketh a vessel, that can not be made whole agayne.

In Tophet shal they be buried, [¶] for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to thē [¶] dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Ierusalem [¶] the houses of the kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the houses, in whose parlors they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hooste of heauē, and poured out drynke offringes vnto straunge goddes. And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophecie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plagues that I haue deuyed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate,^a ad wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The rr. Chapter.

WHEN Pashur the preast, the sonne off Emmer, chefe in the house of y LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so stedfastly: ^bhe smote Ieremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Iamin, in the house of y LORDE. The nexte daye folowing, Pashur brought Ieremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Ieremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull ad afrayed) euery where. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure y: which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before thy face.

And I wil geue whole Iuda vnder the power of the kinge of Babilon, which shal carie some vnto Babilon presoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Morouer, ^call y substance of this londe, all their precious and gorgeous workes, all costlynnes, and all the treasure of the kinges of Iuda: wil I geue in to the hōdes of their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon. But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine houtholde, ⁊ to Babilō shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me, ⁊ makest me stronge agayne. ^dAll the daye longe am I despyed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. ^eFor y which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

Wherefore, I thought from hence forth, not to speake of him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnynge fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisios and blasphemies, yee euen of myne owne companys, and off soch as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde bis tonge: y we maye ouercome him, and be avenged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mightie giaunte: therefore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shall haue an euerlasting shame. And now, o LORDE of hoostes, thou rightuous sercher (which knowest the reynes and the very hertes:) let me se them punyshed, for vnto the I comitte my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath delyuered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: ^fvnhappy be y daye, where in my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities^g which y LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue herself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remayned still in her. ^hWherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience of labour and sorowe? and to lede my life with shame?

The rri. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchia, and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia, prest, sayenge: Axe counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, acordinge to his maruelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Ieremy: Geue Sedechias this answere, ^a Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherwith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilō & the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute [†] walles: & I wil brīge the together in to the myddest of this cite, and I my self wil fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, ^{ad} with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and wil smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both mē ^{ad} catell shal dye of the pestilence.

And after this (saith the LORDE) I shall deluyur Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & his seruantes, his people (and such as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swearde, and hunger) ^b in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hōdes of their enemies, in to the hōdes of those [†] folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with [†] swerde: they shal not pite the, they shal not spare them, they shal haue no mercy vpon them.

And vnto this people thou shalt saye: ^c Thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye of life and deeth. Who so abydeh in this cite, shal perish: with the swearde, with hunger, or with pestilēce. But who so goeth out to holde on [†] Caldees parte, [†] besege it, he shal saue his life, and shal wyne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite ^d (saith the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geuē in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, & be brent with fyre.

And vnto the house of the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: Heare the worde of [†] LORDE (o thou house off Dauid) for thus saith the LORDE: ^e Ministre rightuousnes, and that soone, deluyur the oppressed frō violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions. THUS sayde the LORDE also: Go ^a downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, & saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruantes and thy people, that go in & out at this gate. ^b Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deluyur the oppressed frō the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, ^{ad} shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt ypō Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they & their seruantes, ^{ad} their people. ^b But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saith [†] LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye off it, yf I make the not so waist (& thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? I wil prepare a destroyer with his weapens for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherefore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenaunt off the LORDE their God, ^c and haue worshipped and serued straūge goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he commeth not agayne, ^{ad} seeth his natyue cōuntre no more. For thus saith the LORDE, ^d as touchinge Sellum the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, which reygned after his father, and is caried off this place:

that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neghburgs laboure, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buyde me a wyde house, ad gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkst thou to reigne, now that thou proouoket me to wrath with thy Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as lōge as he dealt with equite ad rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped y oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saith the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therfore, thus saith the LORDE agaynst Ioachim, y sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda: "They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas systre: Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas syr, alas for that noble prynce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast without the gates of Ierusalem.

D Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou daughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaued the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite, But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shalbe dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shalbe caried awaye in to captiuyte: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: "thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, ad makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal thy mournynge be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman traueling with childe?

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE.) "Though Iechonias the sonne off Ioachim kinge off Iuda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him of: And I wil geue the in to y power off thē that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the power of the Caldees. Morouer, I wil sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, ad there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This mā Iechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lōde, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happie, as to syt vpon the seate of Dauid, and to beare rule in Iuda.

The xxiij. Chapter.

WO be vnto the shepherdes, "that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the commaundemēt of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therefore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saith y LORDE: And will gather together the remnant of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saith the LORDE. "Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I wil rayse vp the rightuous braunch off Dauid, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equitye and rightuousnes agayne in the earth.

"In his tyme shall Iuda be saued, and Israel shal dwell without feare. And this is the name that they shall call him: euen the LORDE oure rightuous maker.^a And therfore beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that it shall no more be sayde: the LORDE Iueth, which brought the children off Israel out of the londe of Egipte: But the LORDE Iueth, which brought forth, ad led the sede of the house off Israel, out off the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a droncken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes: Because the londe is full of adouterers, where thorow it is destroyed and mourneth, ^a and ^f pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dried vp. Yee the waye that men take, is wicked, ^g their gouernance is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are poluted Ypocrytes, ^{ad} their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, wherein they maye stacker and fall. For I will bringe a plague vpon them, euen the yeaere of their visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, ^f they preched for Baal, ^{ad} disceaue my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the Prophetes off Ierusalem foule adoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hode, flatteringe them, so that they can not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vnto me, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

^C Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes concernynge the prophetes: ^a Beholde, I wil fede them with wormwod, ^g make them dryncke the water of gall. For fro the prophetes of Ierusalem is the sicknes of Ypocrisie come in to all the londe.

And therefore the LORDE of hoostes geueth you this warnynge: ^e Heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceaue you: for they speake the meanyng of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. ^a They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the councell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? ^e Who hath marked his deuyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wether of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perfourme, and fulfill the thoughte of his herte. ^f And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanyng.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. ^e But yf they had continued in my councell and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginations. ^a Am I the God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farre off? saith the LORDE. Maye eny man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. ^f Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, saye: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cotynue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotylte of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that euery one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, whē Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstonde my worde, ^a let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, (saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpo the prophetes, that steale my worde priuely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tungenes to speake: The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith ^f LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lyes, and disceaue my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. But thus shall ye saye, euery one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the luyngye God the LORDE of hoostes oure God.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before ʒ Tēple of the LORDE, ^aafter ʒ Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilō had led awaye captiue Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kinge of Iuda, the mightie men also of Iuda, with the workemasters and cōnyng men of Ierusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good figes, euen like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes,^b which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

13 Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Ieremy? I sayde: figes, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saith ʒ LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good figes, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place in to the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne in to this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with their whole herte.

^aAnd like as thou knowest the naughtie figes, which maye not be eatē, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saith the LORDE) let Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remaine ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plaged in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a reprove, ^aa comon byworde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal scatre them. I will sende the sward, hunger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clene consumed them out of the londe, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

fore fathers: And go not after straunge goddes, serue them not, worshiþe them not, & angrē me not with the workes of youre hōdes: then will not I punysh you. Neuertheles, ye wolde not heare me (saith the LORDE) but haue defied me with the workes of youre hōdes, to youre owne greate harme.

3 Wherefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Because ye haue not herkened vnto my worde, lo, I will sende out, & call for all the people, ³ dwell in the north^a (saith the LORDE) & wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauant, ⁴ and wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all ⁵ dwell therein, & vpon all the people that are aboute them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wilderness, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome & the bryde, the voyce of the anoynted, with the cressshettes: & this whole londe shal become a wildernes, & they shall serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babilon, thre score yeares and ten. ⁶ When the lxx yeares are expyred, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babylon & his people, saith the LORDE: yee & the londe of the Caldees, & I will make it a perpetuall wildernes, & wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that londe, which I haue deuysed agaynst it: yee all that is written in this boke, which Jeremý hath prophecied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuerse nacions & greate kynges, for I wil recompense them, ⁷ accordinge to their dedes & workes of their owne hondes.

C For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of indignacion from my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) for to drinke of it: that when they haue drunkē thereof, they maye be madd, & out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amōge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDES honde, & made all the people drynke there of, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, & all the cities of Iuda, their kinges & prynces: to make thē desolate, waist, despysed & cursed, accordinge as it is come to passe this daye. Yee & Pharao ⁸ kinge of Egipte, his seruauantes, his prynces & his people altogether one with another and all kinges of the londe of Hus, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron & the remnaunt of Aszdod, the Edomites, the Moabites & the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tirus & Sidon: the kinges of the Iles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz & the shauen Ismaelites: all the kinges of Araby, & (generally) all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all ⁹ kinges of the Meedes, all kinges towarde the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: Yee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commaundement of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spewe, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thorow the swearde, which I wil sende amōge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hoostes threaten you: ¹⁰ drynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For I begynne to plage the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you vnpunished? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpō all the inhabitours of the earth, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitacion. With a greate noyse shall he crie from his courte regall. He shal geue a greate voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shalbe herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyshe the vngodly, saith the LORDE.

¹¹ For thus sayeth ¹² LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, a miserable plage shal go from one people to another, and a greate stormy water shal arise from all the endes of the earth. And the same daye shal the LORDE him-

The xvi. Chapter.

A IN the begynnyng of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: ^b Stonde in the courte of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) come to do worshippe in the LORDES house, all the wordes γ I commaunde thee to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, γ (perauenture) ^c they will herkē, and turne euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determed to bryng vpon them, because of their wicked inuencions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: γ ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tymely, and still sendinge: γ ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhorred of all the people of the earth. ^d And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Ieremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

B Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo? and this cite shalbe so waist, that no man shal dwell there in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Ieremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumoure, τ they came soone out of the kinges Palace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. ^e Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers τ to all the people, these wordes: ^f This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye youre selues haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Ieremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house τ agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. ^g Therefore amende youre wayes, and youre adysemantes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, γ he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as for me: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expediet and good. But this shall ye knowe: γ ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite τ all the inhabitours there of, ^h giltye of innocent bloude. For this is of a truth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, oure God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, τ sayde thus vnto all the people: ⁱ Micheas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: ^k Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Ierusalē shalbe an heape of stones, τ the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wod. Dyd Ezechias γ kinge of Iuda τ the people of Iuda put him to deeth for this? No verely, but rather feared γ LORDE, τ made their prairer vnto him. For the which cause also γ LORDE repented of the plage,

There was a prophete also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORDE, called Vrias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this mā preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lōde, acordinge to all as Ieremy saith. ^a Now when Ioachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herde his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. ^b When Vrias perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & departed in to Egipte.

Then Ioachim the kinge sent seruauentes in to the lōde of Egipte, Namely: Elnathā the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men with him in to Egipte, which fetched Vrias out of Egipte, & brought him vnto kinge Ioachim that slewed him with the swerde, & cast his deed body in to ^c y comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Ieremy, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slavne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kyng of Iuda, came this worde vnto Ieremy from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes ^a & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende thē to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amon, the kinge of Tirus, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messaugers, which shal come to Ierusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto youre masters: ^b I am he that made the earth, the men & ^c y catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greate power & outstretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. ^d And now will I deliyuer all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauent. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his childe children, vntil the tyme of the same lōde be come also: Yee many people & greate kinges shal serue him.

Morouer, that people & kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder ^e y yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I viset with swerde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saith the LORDE. ^f And therfore, folowe not youre prophetes, soyshtsayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye vnto you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from youre londe, & that I might cast you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I wil let remayne still in their owne lōde (saith the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell there in.

^g All these thinges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put youre neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swerde, with hunger, with pestilence: like as the LORDE hath deuysed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therfore geue no eare vnto those prophetes (that tell you: Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, ^h nether haue I sent them, saith the LORDE: how be it they are bolde, falsely for to prophecie in my name: that I might ⁱ y sooner dryue you out, & that ye might perish with youre preachers.

^j I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE: ^k Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue the kinge of Babilon, ^l y ye maye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commytted vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the ornantes (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the seate and the residue of the ornantes that yet remayne in this citie, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Iechonias

Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. ^c And this was done in the same yeare: euē in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

BUT in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, it happened, that Hananias [†] sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabaon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes [‡] and of all the people, and sayde: Thus saieyth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare will ^d I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, [‡] Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I wil bringe agayne Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the presoners of Iuda, ([‡] are caried vnto Babilon,) euē in to this place, saieyth [‡] LORDE, for I wil breake [‡] yock of the kinge of Babilō.

33 Then the prophet Jeremy gaue answer vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prestes [‡] and before all the people that were present in the house of the LORDE. And the prophet Jeremy sayde: ^e Amen, the LORDE do that, and graunte the thinge, which thou hast prophesied: that he maye bringe agayne all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, and restore all the presoners from Babilon in to this place. Neuertheles, herken thou also, what I will saye, that thou [‡] all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which prophesied of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many nations and greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

^f And Hananias the prophet toke the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, and brake it: and with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE spoken: Euen so will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nacions, yee [‡] that within this two yeare. And so the prophet Jeremy wente his waye. C After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Jeremy sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saieyth the LORDE: Thou hast broken the chayne of wodd, but in steade of wodd, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saieyth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, yee [‡] so shal they do. And I wil geue him [‡] bestes in the felde. ^g Then sayde the prophet Jeremy vnto [‡] prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a false beleue. And therefore thus saieyth [‡] LORDE: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lōde, and within a yeare thou shalt die, because thou hast falsely spokē agaynst the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the same yeare in the seuenth Moneth.

you sonnes and daughters: proude wyues for youre sonnes, & huszbonde for youre daughters: that they maye get sonnes & daughters, and that ye maye multiplie there. Labour not to be fewe, but seke after peace & prosperite of the cite, where in ye be presoners, & praye vnto God for it. For in the peace there of, shal youre peace be.

^aFor thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Let not those prophetes and soythsaiers ^y be amonge you, disceaue you: ^g beleue not youre owne dreames. For why, they preach you lies in my name, & I haue not sent them, saith the LORDE. But thus saith the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled lxx yeares at Babilon,^a I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I will carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deuysed for you, saith C the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, & not trouble (which I geue you all redie) & that ye might haue hope agayne. ^eYe shall crie vnto me, ye shal go & call vpō me, & I shal heare you. ^fYe shal seke me, & fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saith the LORDE) and will deluyur you out of preson, & gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scatred you, saith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captiue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath rayسد you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all ^y people that dwell in this cite, ^e youre brethren that are not gone with you in to captiuite.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a sward, hunger & pestilence vpon them,^a and wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eatē for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the sward, with hunger & death.

I wil deluyur them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, & put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: & that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saith the LORDE) which I sent vnto them by my seruauentes the prophetes. ⁱI stode vp early, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom I sent from Ierusalē vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab ^y sonne of Colaias, & of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophecie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil deluyur them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all ^y presoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal take vpō them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Now God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias & Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neighbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, & assure, saith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Ierusalem, & to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prestes: where in thou wrytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordered the to be prest in steade of Ioiada the prest, that thou ^eshuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE aboute all prophetes, & preachers, & that thou mightest put them in preson, or in ^y stockes. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reprobud Ieremy of Anathoth, which neuer leaueth of his prophecience. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captiuite shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therin, & to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes therof. Which letre Sophonias the prest dyd rede; and let Ieremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuite, on this maner: Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge

amonge this people, ⁊ none of them shall se

the LORDE. For he hath preached falsely of the LORDE.

The xxx. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Ieremy, saienge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: "Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a boke. For lo, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the presoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saith the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spake the LORDE, cōcernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauaile. Who euer sawe a man trauaile with childe?⁴ En-quere thereafter, ⁊ se. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye be lickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Iacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be delyuered. For in that daye, saith the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, ⁊ breake thy bondes. They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce vnto God their LORDE, and to David their kinge,⁵ whom I will rayse vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruauit Iacob, feare not (saith ⁊ LORDE) and be not afraied, o Israel. For lo, "I will helpe the also from farre, ⁊ thy sede from the londe of their captiuyte.

And Iacob shall turne agayne, he shalbe in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afraied. For I am with the,
to helpe the, saith the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correce the, and that with discrecion. "For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therefore thus saith ⁊ LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy louers haue forgotten the, and care nother for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myszdedes,⁶ for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy myszdedes and synnes, I haue done this vnto the.

⁶ And therefore all they that deuoure the, shalbe deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captiuyte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted them selues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saith the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye and despised, o Sion.

⁷ For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Iacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shalbe buylded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal haue their right foundation. And out of them shall go thankesgeuyng, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not mynishe: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their children shalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion shal cōtinue in my sight. And all those that vexed them, will I viset.

A captayne also shall come of them,⁸ and a prynce shall springe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myself, and he shall come vnto me. "For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me?
saith the LORDE. "Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shall the wrath of the LORDE breake out as a stormy water, as a mightie whyrl wynde: and shal fall vpō the heades of the vngodly.

The terrible displeasure of the LORDE

The xxi. Chapter.

THUS saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in [¶] wildernes from the swearde, ^b founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LORDE now also appeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlasting loue, therefore do I sprede my mercy before the. ^c I will repayre the agayne (o thou daughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, & go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon [¶] hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shall plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shall crie: ^d Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God, for thus saith the LORDE: Reioyce with gladnes because of Iacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye:
The LORDE shall deliuer his people, the remaunt of Israel, & make them whole. Be-holde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and such as be also delyuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greate.

They departed from hence in heuynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne.
I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stombe:
For I will be Israels father, and Ephraim shalbe
my firstborne.^e

Heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the lles, that lie farre of,
and saye: he that hath scatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme Iacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: ^f The voyce of heuynes, wepyng and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORDE: leaue of from wepyng and crienge, witholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy laboure shalbe rewarded, saith the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies:
Yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Morouer I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captiue) complayne on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me,^g and thy chastenynge haue I receaued, as an vtamed calfe. ^h Conuerte thou me, and I shalbe con-uerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall reforme my self: and when I vnderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue comitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprove and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by my self: ⁱ is not Ephraim my deare sonne?
Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comoned with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therefore my very herte dryeth me vnto him: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou daughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe wilt thou go astraie, o thou shrëkinge daughter?

For the LORDE will worke a new thyng vpon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: It will come therto, that when I haue brought Iuda out of captiuyte, these wordes shalbe herde in γ londe and in his cities: "The LORDE, which is the fayre brydegrome of rightuousnesse, make the frutefull, o thou holy hill: And there shall dwell Iuda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and huszbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule,^b and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to my self, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saith the LORDE) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Iuda, with men and with catell. Yee it shall come therto,^c that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saith the LORDE.

^d Then shall it no more be sayde: γ fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for euery one shall dye for his owne myszdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

^e Beholde, the dayes come (saith the LORDE) γ I will make a new couenaunt with γ house of Israel γ with γ house of Iuda: not after the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the honde, γ led them out of the londe of Egipte: which couenaunt they brake, wherfore I punyshed them sore, saith the LORDE: But this shal be the couenaunt that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes,^f saith the LORDE: I will plante my lawe in the inward partes of them, and write it in their hertes, and wilbe their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thēce forth shall no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hiest, saith the LORDE. For I will forgeue their myszdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. ^g Thus saith the LORDE which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes therof waxe feare: his name is the LORDE of hoostes. Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saith the LORDE: So shal the sede of Israel neuer cease, but all waye be a people before me.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: ^h So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the daies come saith the LORDE, γ the cite of γ LORDE shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto γ gate of the corner wall. ⁱ From thence shal the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Gareb, and shal come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcases, and of the ashes, ^k γ all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the horsgate toward γ east, where as the Sanctuary of the LORDE also shal be set. And when it is now buylded, γ set vp of this fashion it shall neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THESE wordes spake the LORDE vnto ^l Ieremy, in the tenth yere of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was γ xviij yere of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But Ieremy the prophet laye bounde in γ courte of the preson, which was in the kinge of Iudaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: ^m Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyter this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hōde to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prosper.

B And Jeremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme [¶]londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: [¶]for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the preson, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anothot in the countre of Ben Iamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therefore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye: euen seuen sycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waights. So I toke the eyuendence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the eyuendence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the eyuendence, and before all the Iewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed eyuendence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyards shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

C Now when I had deliyuered the eyuendence vnto Baruch [¶]sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: [¶]O LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for [¶]the. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, [¶]thou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the bosome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes: greate in counsell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, [¶]to rewarde euery one after his waye, and acordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men: to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: [¶]Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.

[¶]Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therefore come all these plagies vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnesses therto: and yet in the meane season the cite is deliyuered in to the power of the Caldees.

D Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therefore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal deliyuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor^c the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlors they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offerings vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saith the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, because of the greates blasphemies of the childre of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the cite-syns of Ierusalem.

"When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backes to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correcte. They haue set their goddes in ^f house,^b that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

E Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe deliuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. "Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my fearfull and greates displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

"And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prosper. "And I will set vp an euerlasting couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye fro me.

"Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greates plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hodes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, & euydeces made ther vpon & sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben lamin, & rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpō the mountaynes, & in them that lie beneth, yee & in the cities that are in the deserte. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saith the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

MOROUER the worde of the LORDE A came vnto Jeremy on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh, the LORDE which perfourmeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greates and hie thinges, which were vnknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcasses of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.

"And I will returne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all mysdedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will clesse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afrayed and astonied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: "In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wilderness, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall syng: (^a Praise the LORDE of hoostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Iamin, in the feldes of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, "the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. ^d In those daies shall Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: "Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: "nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burntofferings, to kyndle the meatofferings, and to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: "Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruauant, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. ^e So shall also the prestes and Leuites neuer fayle, but serue me. ^f For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruauant, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Ieremy, sainge: Cōsidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynneddes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, and those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, y they haue no hope to come together eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Yf I haue made no couenaunt with daye and night, and geuē no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruauant: so that I wil take no pryncce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, and all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes y were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Ierusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Go, and speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and tell him: "The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and deliuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as thy fore fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, and in the mournyng they shal saye: oh lorde. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORDE.

Then spake Ieremy the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Ierusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste beseged Ierusalem, and the remnaunt of the cities: Namely, Lachis and Azecha, which yet remaineyd of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Ierusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a libertie: "so that euery man shulde let fre go his seruauant and handmayde, Hebrue & Hebruesse, & no lewe to holde his brother as a bonde man. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruauantes and handmaydens, whom they had letten go fre, and so made them bonde agayne.

C For the which cause the wordes of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy from the LORDE himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with your fathers, when I brought them out of Egypte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: "When seven yeares are out, euery man shal let go fre his bought seruauante an Hebrue, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But your fathers obeyed me not & herkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in y^e ye proclaimed, euery mā to let his neyghboure go fre, & in y^e ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned your selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, y^e euery man hath requyred his seruauant and hand mayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be your bonde men. And therefore thus saith the LORDE: Ye haue not obeyed me, euery man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neyghboure: wherefore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saith the LORDE: euen vnto the swearde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plaged in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yee those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: "when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halves therof: The prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Ierusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wete thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that folowe vpon their lyues.

"And their deed bodies shall be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deluyer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that desyre to slaye them, and in to the honde of the kyng of Babylons hooste, "which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement (saith the LORDE) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shall fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Morouer I will laye the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shall dwell therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

THE wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, (in the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda) are these: "Go vnto y^e house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe thē to y^e house of the LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Iasania the sonne of Ieremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethrē and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the cheffe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For Ionadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne,¹ buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, y^e ye maye lyue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straūgers.

Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaudemēt of Ionadab y^e sonne of Rechab oure father, in all y^e he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, oure sonnes & oure daughters. Nether buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amonge vs nether vynyardes, ner corne lōde to sowe : but we dwell in tentes, we obeye, & do acordinge vnto all, that Ionadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now [¶] Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde : come, let vs go to Ierusalē, [¶] we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assiriās : & so we dwell now at Ierusalē. Then came [¶] worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge : Thus saieth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Go & tell whole Iuda & all the inhabitours of Ierusalē : Wyll ye not be reformed, to obeye my wordes ? saieth the LORDE. The wordes which Ionadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaūded his sonnes, [¶] they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast & surely kepte : for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne : but obeye their fathers cōmaūdement.

¶ But as for me, ^a I haue stōde vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, & geuen you earnest warnyng : & yet haue ye not bene obediēt vnto me. Yee I haue sent my seruātes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, & sent you worde, sayenge : O turne you, euery man from his wicked waye : amēde youre lyues, & go not after straunge goddes, to worshippe the : [¶] ye maye cōtinue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and youre fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childrē of Ionadab Rachabs sonne haue stedfastly kepte their fathers cōmaūdement, [¶] he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hostes [¶] God of Israel : Beholde, I wil bringe vpō Iuda & vpō euery one [¶] dwelleth in Ierusalē, all the trouble [¶] I haue deuyed agaynst thē. ^b For I haue spokē vnto thē, but they wolde not folowe : I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answer. Ieremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites : Thus saieth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : For so much as ye haue obeyed [¶] cōmaūdemēt of Ionadab youre father, & kepte all his preceptes, & done acordinge vnto all [¶] he hath bydden you : Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel : Ionadab the sonne of Rechab shal not fayle, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allway before me.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne ^a of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came [¶] worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayēge : Take a boke, & [¶] write therein all [¶] wordes, [¶] I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda & to all the people, frō the tyme [¶] I begāne for to speake vnto the (in [¶] reigne of Iosias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda hearth of the plage, which I haue deuyed for thē, they maye peraduenture turne, [¶] euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offences and synnes.

Then dyd Ieremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, & Baruch wrote in the boke at [¶] mouth of Ieremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Ieremy commaūded Baruch sayenge : I am in pre-son, so that I maye not come in to the house of [¶] LORDE : therfore go thou thither, & rede the boke, that thou hast writē at my mouth : Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, & rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye : that the people, whole Iuda, & ^b all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peraduenture they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vnto all that Ieremy the prophet cōmaūded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yere off Ioachim [¶] sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, in the ix. moneth ^c when it was commaūded, that all the people of Ierusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Iuda vnto Ierusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of Ieremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of [¶] treasury of ^d Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the scribe, which is besyde the hyer lofte off the new dore of the LORDES house : that all [¶] people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne of Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of [¶] boke, he wēte downe to the kinges palace in to [¶] scribes chābre, for there all þ̃ prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, þ̃ he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Iehudi þ̃ sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke þ̃ boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, þ̃ we maye heare also. So Baruch red, þ̃ they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abashez one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wyrite all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Ieremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kyng all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kyng sent Iehudi to fetch him þ̃ boke, which he brought out of Elisama þ̃ scribes chambre. And Iehudi red it, that the kyng and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kyng sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Iehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof,^a he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpō the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kyng himselfe, ner his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstandinge þ̃ kyng wolde not heare them, but commaunded Ieramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia þ̃ sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Ieremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. After now that the kyng had brente the boke, ad þ̃ sermōs which Baruch wrote at þ̃ mouth off Ieremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Ioachim the kyng off Iuda hath brente.

And tell Ioachim the kyng off Iuda, Thus saith the LORDE: thou hast brente þ̃ boke, and thoughtest within thy self: Why hast thou written therein, that the kyng off Babilon shal come, & make this lōde waist? so that he shall make both people and catel to be out of it? Therefore thus the LORDE saith, of Ioachim the kyng of Iuda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of Dauid. His deed corse shalbe cast out,^c that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruantes. Morouer all the euell that I haue promised thē (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon þ̃ inhabitours of Ierusalem, and vpon all Iuda. Then toke Ieremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Ieremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Ioachim the kyng off Iuda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

SEDECHIAS þ̃ sonne of Iosias (^a which was made kyng thorow Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Iuda, in the steade off Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim. But nether he, ner his seruantes, ner the people in the lōde wolde obeye the wordes of þ̃ LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Ieremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kyng sent Iuchal the sonne of Salamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Ieremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Ieremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in preson as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egipte: which when the Caldees that beseged Ierusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy the prophet, sayēge: Thus saith ſ LORDE God of Israel, This answerē shal ye geue to the kynge of Iuda, that sent you vnto me for counsell: ¶ Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, ¶ fight agaynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saith the LORDE: disceauē not youre owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Ierusalē for feare of the Egipcians armye, Ieremy went out of Ierusalē towards the lōde of Ben Iamin, to do certayne busynesse there amōge ¶ people. And whē he came vnder Ben Iamyns Porte, there was a porter called Ierias the sonne of Selamias^a ¶ zōne of Hananias, which fell vpō him ¶ toke him, sayēge: thy mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Ieremy: It is nōt so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Ierias wolde not beleue him, but brought Ieremy bōnde before the princes. Wherefore the princes were angrie with Ieremy, causinge him to be beaten, ¶ to be layed in preson in the house of Ionathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the preson. Thus was Ieremy put in to the dongeon ¶ preson, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, ¶ called him, ¶ axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynesse (that now is in honde) cōmeth of the LORDE? Ieremy answerde: yee ¶ it doth: ¶ thou (sayde he) shalt be deliuered in to the kynge of Babilōns power.

¶ Morouer, Ieremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst ¶, agaynst thy seruātes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in preson? ¶ Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophced vnto you and sayde, that ¶ kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you ¶ this lōde? And therefore heare now, o my lordē

the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, ¶ sende me nomore in to ¶ house of Ionathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Ieremy in the fore entrie off the preson, and daily to be geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Ieremy remayned in ¶ fore entrie off the preson.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

SAPHATIAS the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Iuchal the sonne of Selamias, ¶ Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, ¶ Ieremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, ¶ with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shal escape, wynnynge his soule for a pray, ¶ shal lyue. For thus saith the LORDE: This cite (no doute) must be deliuered in to ¶ power of the kige of Babilō, ¶ he also shal wyne it. Thē sayde the prynces vnto ¶ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discourageth the hōdes of the soudyers ¶ be in this cite, ¶ the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of ¶ people, but mischeffe. Sedechias the kinge answered and sayde: lo, he is in youre hōdes, for ¶ kige maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Ieremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the preson. And they let downe Ieremy with coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Ieremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beyngē a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Ieremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which thē sat vnder the porte off Ben Iamin) these wordes: My lordē the kynge, where as these men medle with Ieremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in preson, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bred in the cite. Thē the kynge commaūded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, ¶ drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men with him, & went to ſ house of Amalech, & there vnder an almery he gat olde ragges & worne cloutes, & let thē downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Ieremy.

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Ieremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte thē and the coardes: ad Ieremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Ieremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the preson. Thē Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Ieremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE.^a And the kynge sayde vnto Ieremy: I wil axe the somewhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. Thē Ieremy answerde Sedechias: Yf I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the coicell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto Ieremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Ieremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saieih ſ LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, ^band this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shal this cite be delyuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Ieremy: I am afrayde for the Iewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Ieremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke ſ) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Iudaes house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, ſ thou art disceaused: and that ſ men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy fete fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be ſ kynge of Babilons presoner, & this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Ieremy: loke ſ no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceauē, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kynge to the? hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde ſ kynge to the? Se thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lye no more in Ionathas house, that I dye not there? Then came all the prynces vnto Ieremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him.^c Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Ieremy abode still in the fore entrie off the preson, vntill the daye that Ierusalem was wonne.

The xxxix. Chapter.

NOW when the cite off Ierusalē was taken^d (for in the ix. yere of Sedechias kynge of Iuda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Ierusalem. And in the xi. yere of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth ſ ix. daye of ſ Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, & sat thē downe vnder the porte: Nergall, Sarezzer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabсарis, Nergal, Sarezzer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Iuda with his soudyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of ſ cite by night thorow the kynges garde, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Iericho, and brought him presoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Iuda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and boude him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, ^awith f other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Ierusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Iuda, and gaue them vnyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kyng of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernynge Ieremy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

C So Nabuzaradā f chefe captayne, Nabuzaszbā the chefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarezer the treasurer and all the kyngs of Babilons lordes, ^bsent for Ieremy, t caused him be fet out off the fore entrie off the preson, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphan: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. ^cNow whyle Ieremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the preson, f worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Morian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes f God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I brynge vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil delyuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the bondes off those men, whom thou fearest. For doutles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swearde: but thy life shalbe saued, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORDE.

The xl. Chapter.

A ^dTHIS is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Ieremy, when Nabuzaradan the ^echefe captayne had let him go fre from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the presoners, that were caried from Ierusalem and Iuda vnto Babilon. The chefe captayne called for Ieremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and performed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therefore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I lowse the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vp thē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: ^floke where thou thinkest conueniēt t good for the to Abyde, there dwell. Yf thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne with Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, ^gwhom the kyng of Babilō hath made gouernoure ouer f cities of Iuda, t dwell with him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it pleaseth f . So the chefe captayne gaue him his expēs with a rewarde, t let him go. ^hThen wēte Ieremy vnto Godolias f sonne of Ahicā to Masphat, t dwelt there with him amonge the people that were left in the londe.

Now when f captaynes of the hooste of Iuda (which with their felowes were scatred abrode on euery syde in f lōde) vnderstode, f the kyng of Babilō had made Godolias f sonne of Ahicā gouernoure in the lōde, t f man, wife t childe, yee t the poore men in the londe (f were not led captiue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Iurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathania, Iohāna t Ionathas the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhomet, the sonnes of Opheus f Netophetite, Iesania f sonne of Machati, with their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne off Saphā, swore vnto thē t their felowes on this maner: ⁱBe not afrayed to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, t do the kyng of Babilon seruce, so shal ye prospere. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, t to satisfie soch as come to vs. Therefore gather you wyne, corne and oyle, and kepe them in youre ware houses, and dwell in youre cities, that ye haue in kepinge.

Thē sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicam to Iohanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Ismael.

The xli. Chapter.

BUT in the seuenth Moneth it happened, ⁊ Ismael the sonne of Nathania ⁊ sonne of Elisama (one of ⁊ kynges bloude) came with thē that were greatest aboute the kyng, ⁊ ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathania with those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan with the swearde, ⁊ slewe hym, whom the kyng off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Iewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

B The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnknowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, ⁊ were all heuye, bringinge meat offringes and incense in their hondes, to offre it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathania went forth of Masphat wepinge, to mete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathania (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, eue at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, ⁊ sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynge Asa caused to be made, ^a for feare off Baasa the kyng off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the rēnaunt off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicam gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathania caried them awaye presoners towarde the Ammonites. But when Iohāna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, ^a herde of all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathania had done: they toke their companys, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne of Nathania, and founde him by the waters off Rabim in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captiue, sawe Iohāna ⁊ sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye frō Masphat, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Iohanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathania fled from Iohāna with eight of his sworne companys, ⁊ wente to the Ammonites. Then Iohanna the sonne of Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were with him, toke the remnaūt of the people, whom Ismael the sonne of Nathania had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from him: fightinge men, women ⁊ children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente from thence, and sat them downe at Geruth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egipte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afrayed, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Ahicams sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had "made gouernoure in the londe.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO all the rulers, and Iohāna the sonne off Carea, Iesaias the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Ieremy the prophet: "O heare oure peticiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE thy God, and for the remnant, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Ieremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and loke what answere the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge back frō you. "And they sayde vnto Ieremy: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be oure recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will herken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the: that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

33 And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Ieremy. Then called he Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: Yee & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: Yf ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buyde you vp, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as cōcernynge the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deluyuer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and brynge you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Neuertheles, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre hunger, there will we dwell. Wherefore heare now the worde of the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: "Yf ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, ād to be there as straigers: "the swearde that ye feare, shall ouer take you in Egipte: and the hunger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vndertake to go in to Egipte, there to ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with hunger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours of Ierusalē, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shalbe reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbyddeth you (o ye remnaūt of Iuda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. "For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answere the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, ād we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. "Yf ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with hunger & pestilence: euen in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The xliij. Chapter.

NOW when Ieremy had ended all y^e 34 wordes of y^e LORDE God vnto y^e people, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne of Osias, & Iohāna y^e sonne of Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Ieremy: Thou lyst, the LORDE oure God "hath not sent y^e to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egipte, and dwell

there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bringe vs in to the captyuyte off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs away presoners vnto Babilon

So Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Iuda: But Iohanna the sonne of Carea & all the captaynes of the hooste, caried away all the remnaunt in Iuda, that were come together agayne from the Heithen (amöge whom they had bene scatred)^a to dwell in the londe of Iuda: Men, women, childrē, the kynges daughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. They caried away also the prophet Ieremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

33 And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Ieremy, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine höde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Iuda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: 'Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon my seruauit, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall sprede his tente ouer them.

And when he commeth, he shal smyte the löde of Egipte with slaughter, with presonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egipcias goddes, and burne them vp, & take them selues presoners. Morouer he shall araye himself with the löde of Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his cote, and shall departe away from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the tempels of the Egipcians goddes.

The xliij. Chapter.

34 THIS is the worde ³⁵ which was shewed to Ieremy cöcerninge all ³⁶ the Lewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis, at Memphis, & in the londe of Patures. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all ³⁷ my misery, ³⁸ which I haue brought vpon Ierusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: & ³⁹ because of the greates blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger: In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner youre fathers haue knowne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruauites all the prophetes: 'I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, & things that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herke, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion & wrath was kyn-dled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda, the feldes with the stretes off Ierusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childrē and babes of Iuda? so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egipte, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vtterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nacions. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off youre forefathers, the wickednes off ³⁹ the kynges of Iuda and their wyues, ⁴⁰ which wickednes that ye youre selues ad youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the cite and in the londe off Ierusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not, nether walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geuē vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God off Israel: 'I am stedfastly advyced and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Iuda. 'As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente in to Egipte, there to ease them off their misery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In ⁴¹ the löde of Egipte shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swearde and with hunger. For from ⁴² which leest vnto ⁴³ which most, they shal perishe with the swearde and with honger. Morouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egipte, "as I haue visited Ierusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to þe londe off Iuda: all though they thyinke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but soch as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, & a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egipte in the cite of Patures, answerde Ieremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: ^alike as we and oure forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and feldes of Ierusalem. For then had we plenteuousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, ^cwe haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perish with the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauē, did we make her cakes ad poure vnto her drinkofferings, to do her seruyce, without oure huszbondes wylles?

Then sayde Ieremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the folke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, youre forefathers, ^dyour kiges & rulers (with all the people) haue offred in the cities of Iuda, in the stretes and londe off Ierusalem? and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so much, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? ^eIs not youre londe desolate & voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe this daye?

ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.^g

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe this daye.

Morouer, Ieremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Iuda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: ^h"We will not fayle, but do the thyng that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynckofferings to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Iuda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, ⁱI haue sworne by my greate name (saieth the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow eny mans mouth of Iuda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plage them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Iuda that be in the lode of Egipte, ^jshal perish with the swearde and with honger, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for þe swearde, shal come agayne in to the lode of Iuda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remnaunt off Iuda, that are gone in to Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shalbe founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil viset you in this place (saieth the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perfourme my purpose vpon you, to punysh you. Beholde (saieth the LORDE) I wil delyuer Pharao Ophram kyng of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, ^kþe seke after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kyng of Iuda ^lin to the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kige of Babilo, which sought after his life.

of Nerias, "after that he had written these Sermōs in to a boke at the mouth of Ieremy, In the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda.

Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauayle: I haue weered my self with sighinge, and shall I fynde no rest? Therefore tell him (O Ieremy) ³³ the LORDE saith thus: Beholde, The thinge that I haue buylded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. And sekest thou yet promociō? Loke not for it, and desyre it not. The xlvi. Chapter.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed? why shrēcke ye backe? wherefore are youre worthies slayne? Yee they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saith the LORDE. The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye ³⁹ cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to horse backe, roll forth ⁴⁰ Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre buclers, ye Lideans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vègeaunce, that he maye avege him of his enemies. The swearde shal deuoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayneoffringe towardes the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the daughter off Egipte:

But in wayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The Heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shalbe full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stomble vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

These are the wordes that the LORDE ⁴¹ spake to the prophet Ieremy, ⁴² concernynge ⁴³ the hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon, which was to destroye the londe off Egipte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egipte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie worthies are fallen? why stode they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greate, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swearde of oure enemye.

Crie euen there: O Pharao kynge of Egipte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. ⁴⁴ As truly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as ⁴⁵ the mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stode in the see. O thou daughter of Egipte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nomā shal dwell therein. The londe of Egipte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forward. Hir wagied souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come with axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. And they shall cut downe hir wod (saith the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shall be mo in nôbre then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell thê. The daughter of Egipte shalbe confounded, whê she shalbe delyuered in to the hondes off the people off the north.

¶ Morouer thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vyset that restlesse people off Alexandria, Pharao and Egipte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharao, and all them y litten vnto him. "Yee I will delyuer them in to the hondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon, and in to the power off his seruaites. "And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE.

"But be not thou afraied (o my seruauent Iacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuyte. Iacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. "Feare thou not (o Iacob my seruauent) saith the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correce the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as one that were faultlesse.

The xlvij. Chapter.

¶ THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, before that Pharao smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnyng ouer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barded horses, at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the romblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuoyded fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to thy sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it cease, when the LORDE himself hath geuen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and raysed it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The xlvij. Chapter.

¶ THUS saith y LORDE off hoostes y God of Israel agaynst Moab: "Wo be to y cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee thy strôge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afraied: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked counsell shalbe taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute y. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. At the goinge vp vnto Luhith there shall arise a lamêtacion: and downe towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues t be like vnto the heeth in y wilderness. "For, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

All hir neighbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou daughter Dibō, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to y^e strete, & loke aboute the: axe them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thyng is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And mysery shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpō holon, and Iaza: vpon Mephat and Dibō, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim, vpon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

¶ The horne of Moab shal be myttē downe, & hir arme broken, saith the LORDE. Make hir dronken (for she magnified hir self aboute the LORDE:) that men maye clappe their hondes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israel, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken amōge theues? ^aYee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Ye Moabites shal leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like doues, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. ^cI knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogācy and the pryde off hir stomack, saith the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde hir with strength, ner dede. Therfore shal there mournynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o Iazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne brāūches shal come ouer y^e see, and the braunches off Iazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and cheare shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and Ioaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre yere olde. The waters also off Nemrim shalbe dried vp.

Morouer I will make Moab cease (saith the LORDE) from the offringes and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherefore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also,^f euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shauen, and all beerdes clipped off: all handes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saith the LORDE. O how fearfull is she? O how mourneth she? O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed? Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

For thus saith the LORDE: "Beholde, the enemy shall come flyenge as an Aegle, and sprede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wyne the stronge holdes. Then the mighty mens hertes in Moab, 'shalbe like the herte off a woman trauelinge with childe.

And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal nomore be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and snare shall come vpon the (o Moab) saith the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shal be taken in the snare."

For I will bringe a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, & shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnes and doughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiue agayne, saith the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The xlii. Chapter.

AS concerninge the Ammonites, "thus the LORDE saith: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyre? Why hath your kynge then taken Gad in? wherefore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will brynge a noyse off warre in to Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saith the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall crie out, and gyrd them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye presoner: yee his preestes and prynces with him.

Wherefore trustest thou in the water streames, that flowe to and fro, o thou feare doughter: and thyngest thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will brynge a feare vpon the, saith the LORDE God off hostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shall be scatred euery man from another, and no mā shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiue agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hostes spoken on this maner: "Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backes, crepe downe in to the depe, O ye citesyns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destructio vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. Yff the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? Yff the night robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take so moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, ad he himself shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thyngest thou then to be fre?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte nor fre, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my self (saith the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly informed off the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: "I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomach & the pryde of thy herte haue disceaueed the, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Neuertheles though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORDE. Morouer

Idumea shall be a wilderness: "who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wondre at all hir miserable plagues. Like as Sodom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saith f LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Iordane vnto f grene pastures of Ethā, so wil I dryue him, t make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondes?

But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: hir yonge men shal fall in the stretes, and all hir men of warre shal be takē awaye in that tyme, saith the LORDE of hoostes. I will kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal cōsume the palace of Benadad.

f As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor, t whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vp vnto Cedar, and destroye the people towarde the east. Their tentes and their flockes shal they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessel. Their Camels also shall they carie awaye with them. Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euerlasting wilderness: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE f spake to the prophet Ieremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from f foure quarters of heauen, t wil scatere them agaynst the same foure wyndes. The I. Chapter.

f THE wordes f the LORDE spake vnto the prophet Ieremy, concernynge Babilon, t the londe of the Caldees: f Preach amonge the Gentiles, let youre voyce be herde, make a tokē: crie out, kepe no sylence, but saye: Babilon shal be wonne, Bel shalbe cōfounded, and Merodach shalbe ouercome.

out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir londe so waist, that no body shal dwell therein: nether man ner beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes ⁊ at that tyme (saith the LORDE) ^a the childre of Israel shall come, they ⁊ the children of Iuda, weping ⁊ makinge haist, ⁊ shal seke the LORDE their God. They shall axe the waye to Sion, thither shall they turne their faces, ⁊ come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

^b My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceaued them, ⁊ haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, ⁊ forgotten their folde. All they ⁊ came vpon them, haue deuoured the: ⁊ their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORDE, yee euen the LORDE which is the bewtie of their rightuousnes, ⁊ ⁊ defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, ⁊ departe out of ⁊ londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. ^c For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from ⁊ northren londe, ⁊ bringe them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, ⁊ wyne it: Their arrowes shal not mysse, like as a connynge archer shuteth not wronge. And the Caldees shalbe spoyled, ⁊ all they that spoyle them, shalbe satisfied, saith the LORDE: ^d because ye were so chearfull ⁊ glad, to treade downe myne heretage, ⁊ fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calues in the grasse: ⁊ triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shalbe sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, voyde, waist, ⁊ dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of ⁊ LORDE, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, ^e shall stonde still, ⁊ be abashed, ⁊ shal wondre at all hir plages.

^f Go forth in youre aray agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all ye that can handle bowes: shute at her, spare no arrowes, for she hath synned agaynst the LORDE. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her roide aboute: she shal yelde her selfe, her foundaciōs shal fall, ⁊ hir walles shall come downe, for it shalbe the vengeance of the LORDE. ^g Yee vengeance shalbe taken of her, ⁊ as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, ⁊ him ⁊ handleth the sickle in haruest. For feare of the swearde of the enemye, euery man shall get him to his owne people, ⁊ euery man shal fle to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. ^h First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon hath brusled all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will viset the kinge of Babilon ⁊ his kingdom, ⁱ as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bringe Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Charnel ⁊ Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim ⁊ Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORDE) ^j yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: Yf men enquire for the synne of Iuda, there shal be none: for I wil be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou avenger) in to the enemies londe, ⁊ viset them that dwell therein: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORDE: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter ⁊ greate murthur, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken ⁊ brusled in sonder? How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wildernes amonge the Heithen on this maner? I my self haue layed wayte for the, ⁊ thou art taken: vnawares art thou trapped ⁊ snared: for why, thou hast prouoked ⁊ LORDE vnto anger: The LORDE hath opened his house of ordinance, ⁊ brought forth the weapons of his wrath. them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye

 agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers
 agaynst Babilon, pyth youre tentes rounde her, as she hath deserued: and acordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst ^h holy one of Israel. Therfore shal hir yonge men fall downe in the stretes, ⁊ all hir men of warre shal be rote out in ^h daye, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto

^f Thus saieth the LORDE of hostes: The children of Israel ⁊ Iuda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuyte, kepe them fast, ⁊ wil not let them go: but their auēger ⁊ redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shake, ⁊ iudge them that dwell therein, one with another.
 The swearde shall come vpon the Caldees (saieth the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, ⁊ vpō their wyse mē: The swearde vpon their soithsayers, (as for those, they shall become fooles.) The swearde vpō their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, ⁊ vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder the: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stollen awaye:
^g The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shalbe dried vp: For the londe worshippeth ymagēs, ⁊ delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therfore shal wilde beestes, Apes ⁊ Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, nether shal eny man haue his habitacion there for euer more. ^bLike as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saieth the

LORDE: So shal noman dwell there also, nether shal eny mā haue there his habitacion.
^c Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, ⁊ many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes ⁊ buclers, cruell are they ⁊ vmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, ⁊ come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heynes shall come vpon him, as a woman trauelinge with childe. Beholde, ^dlike as the Lyon commeth vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Iordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I dryue the forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, ⁊ ordene to such thinge? ^eFor who is like me, or who wil stryue with me? or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therfore heare the counsel that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuyce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amōge the people shal teare them in peces, ⁊ loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue:
 they shal laye it waist. The noyse at ^f wynnyng of Babilon shal moue the earth, ⁊ the crie shalbe herde amonge the Gētiles.

B rewarder her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDES honde a golden cuppe, ^a & maketh all londres droncken. Of hir wyne haue all people droncken, therefore are they out of their wittes. ^b But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourn for her, brynge plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peradventure be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Babilon whole (saye they) but she is not recouered. Therefore wil we let her alone, & go euery mā in to his owne countre. For hir iudgmēt is come in to heauen, & is gone vp to the cloudes. And therefore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORDE oure God.

C Make sharpe the arowes, and fyll the quyvers: 'for the LORDE shall rayse vp the sprete of the kyng of the Meedes, which hath already a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shalbe the vengeance of the LORDES, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set youre watchmen in araye, yee holde preuye watches: & yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deucey, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

O thou that dwellest by the greате waters, o thou that hast so greате treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: & the rekenyng of thy wynnynges. ^c The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a corage shall criе Alarum Alarum agaynst the. ^d Yee euen the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wisdome prepayred ^e & rounde worlde, & with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the ayre waxe feare: ^f He draweth vp the cloudes from the endes of the earth. He turneth ^g & lightenynges to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secrete places. By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. ^h Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for ⁱ & thinge that they make, is but disceate, & hath no breath. Vayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Iacob is none soch: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rodde of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions & kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse & horse man, yee the charettes, & soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man & woman, olde and yonge, bachelor & mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde & his flocke, the husbond man & his catell, the prynces & the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarder the cite of Babilon & all hir citesyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noysome hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londres. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: & wil make the a brente hill, so that nether corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shalbe taken eny more out of the, but waist & desolate shalt thou lie for euermore, saith the LORDE.

Set vp a tokē in the londe: blowe the E trompettes amonge the Heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greате a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them ^f people of the Meedes with their kynges, prynces & all their chefe rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be afrayed, when the deucey of the LORDE shall come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no mā shal dwell eny more therin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shalbe like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shalbe broken. One purseuaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupyde, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers sore afrayed.

but shortly shal hir haruest come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. He swallowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicates: he hath cast me out, he hath takē my substaunce awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the doughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saith Ierusalem. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir water sprynges.

“Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulness & wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like lyons, & as the yonge lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bide them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before thē, & they shalbe droncken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sesah wonne? O, how was the glory of y whole londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the Heithē? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath couered her with his greате wawes. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnbylded and voyde: it is a londe where no man dwelleth, & where no mā traueth thorow. Morouer, I wil vyset Bel at Babilō: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shall runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

“O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not faynte herted, & feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydings, yee strange wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme commeth that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therein, shall reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saith y LORDE.

Like as Babilō hath beaten downe and

slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the sward, haist you, stōde not still, remembre the LORDE afarre of: and thinke vpon Ierusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde (saith the LORDE) the tyme commeth, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. “Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saith the LORDE.

A piteous crie shal be herde from Babilon, and a greате mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryueth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the wawes of greате water floudes, and made greате crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shall come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence thē. Yee (saith the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chefe rulers & all their worthies, dronckē: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saith the kinge, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thinge that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greате trauayle and laboure, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

This is the charge that Ieremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable prync. Ieremy wrote in a boke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this

Thus farre are y^e preachinges of Jeremy.

The liij. Chapter.

A SEDECHIAS was xxj. yeare olde, when he was made kynge, & he reigned xj. yeare in Ierusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Ieremies doughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE euen as Ioachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Ierusalem & Iuda, so longe till he had cast the out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kynge of Babilon. "But in y^e ix. yeare of his raigne, In the tēth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon with all his hooste came before Ierusalem, & beseged it, & made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeare of kynge Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix daye of the Moneth, there was so greate hunger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. "So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now y^e Caldees had cōpassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilderness.

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Iericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kynge awaye prisoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, "where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kinge of Babilō also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee & put all the prynces of Iuda to death at Reblatha. Morouer he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: & let him lie in preson, till he dyed.

Now y^e tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xix yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne and the kinge of Babilons seruantes came vnto Ierusalem, & brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kynges palace, all the houses & all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y^e were with the chefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Ierusalem rounde aboute.

As for the poore people & soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kinge of Babilon, yee & what people as yet remainyd: Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caried them awaye prisoners. But y^e poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chefe captayne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vynyardes & feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y^e LORDE: & caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones & all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes y^e stode vnder y^e seate, which kinge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: & all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, & the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, & foure fingers thick and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, & euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: & vpon the knoppes were whopes, & pomgranates rounde aboute of cleue brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundreth and xcvi, which hanged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chefe captayne also toke Sarias y^e hie prest, & Sophonias that was chefe next him, and the thre keepers of the treasury. He toke out of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captayne of the souldyers, ⁊ seuen men that were the kinges seruantes, which were founde in the cite: ⁊ Sepher a captayne that vsed to muster the men of warre: with lx men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chefe captayne toke, ⁊ caried them to the kinge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kinge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Hemath. And thus Iuda was ledde awaye captiue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor ledde awaye captiue.

35 In the seuenth yeare of his reigne, he caried awaye of ȝ Iewes, thre thousande thre and twenty. In the xviij yeare Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Ierusalem eight hunderth and xxxij personnes. In the xxij yeare of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chefe captayne, toke awaye seuen hundreth xlv Iewes presoners. The whole summe of all the presoners, is foure thousande and sex hundreth.

"In the xxxvij yeare after that Ioachim the kinge of Iuda was caried awaye in the xxv daye of the xij Moneth, Euſmerodach kinge of Babilon (the same yeare ȝ he reigned) gaue Ioachim the kinge of Iuda his pardon, and let him out of preson, and spake louyngly to him: And set his trone aboue ȝ trones of the other kinges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the clothes of his preson, yee and he att with him all his life longe. And he had a cōtinuall lyuyng geuen him of the kinge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge alowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The ende of the prophet Jeremy.

The Lamentacions of Jeremy.

AND it came to passe (after Israel was brought in to captiuite, and Ierusalem destroyed:) that Ieremy the prophet at wepinge, mournyng and makinge his mone in Ierusalem: so that with an heuy herte he sighed, ⁊ sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

38 N LAS, how sitteth the cite so desolate, ȝ some tyme was full of people? how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions? "How is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes?

° 2 Re. 4. b. 4 Re. 15. a.

She wepeth sore in the night, so that ȝ teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, ⁊ are become hir enemies.

Iuda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: ⁊ for seruyng so many strange goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the Heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

39 The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man commeth more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heynesne.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, & haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: "hir children are ledde away captiue before their enemye.

All the bewtie of the daughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like wethers, that fynde no pasture. They are dryue awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Ierusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery & disobedience, yee the ioye & pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seyng hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, & there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lookinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Ierusalem synned euer more & more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is a shamed of herselfe.

Hir skyrtes are defyled, she remēbred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious things that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the Heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion.

All hir people seke their bred with heynesne, & loke "what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wher with the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliyuered me in to those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myself.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best mē. The LORDE hath troden downe the daughter of Iuda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gusshe out of water: "for the cōforter that shulde quycken me, is farre fro me. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Iacob, and Ierusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue prouoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heynesne: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuyte.

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and counclers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heynesne. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The ij. Chapter.

2 The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Iacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the daughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & throwne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

3 In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the horne of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemye: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Iacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

7 He hath bent his bowe like an enemye, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and euery thinge that was pleasauit to se, he hath smyten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the daughter Zion.

7 The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemye, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the daughter of Iuda with moch sorow and heuynesse.

13 Hir tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solēpne feastes hath he put downe. "The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Zion, are clene forgottē. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kynge & prestes to be despised.

1 The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aulter, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemye. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

7 The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the daughter Zion, he spred out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrettes and the broken walles together.

13 Hir portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smyten in sonder: hir kynge & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles.^b They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

13 The Senatours of the daughter Zion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed aszshes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sack cloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

13 Myne eyes begynne to fayle me thorow

wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuer is poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurte of my people, seynge the children and babes dyd sowne in the stretes of the cite.

Euen when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

What shal I saye of the (O thou daughter Ierusalem) to whom shall I lickē the? To whom shal I cōpare the (o thou daughter Zion) to comforte the withall? Thy hurte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge, that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had deuysed longe agoo: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and set vp the horne of thine enemye.

Let thine hert crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the daughter Zion: 'let thy teares rūne downe like a ryuer daye & night: rest not, & let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the first watch of the night, poure out thine hert like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge children, that dye of hunger in the stretes.

The iij. Chapter.

I AM the mā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiēce of misery.

He droue me forth, and led me: yee in to darknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, ⁊ layeth it euer vpon me.

My flesh ⁊ my skyne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brusced.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, ⁊ closed me in with gall and trauayle.

He hath set me in darknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, ⁊ hath layed heuy lynckes vpon me.

Though I crie ⁊ call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stoppd vp my wayes with foure squared stones, ⁊ made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

I am laughed to scorne of all my people, they make songes vpon me all ⁊ daye lōge.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, ⁊ geuen me wormwod to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, ⁊ rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

O remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwod and the gall.

Yee thou shalt remēbre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whye I cōside these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, ⁊ that his lounge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulness is greate, and renueth itself as the mornynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saieth my soule) therfore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto thē, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to wate and tarie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reprocues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to ⁊ multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, ⁊ cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To moue the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saieth: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES cōmaundement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherefore then murmureth the luyinge man? let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs lōke well vpon oure owne waies, ⁊ remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to ⁊ LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers ⁊ haue offended, wilt thou therfore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, ⁊ persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the Heithen.

v All oure enemies gape vpon vs.

v Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despite and destruction.

v Whole ryuers of water guszhe out of myne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.

3 Myne eyes runne, and can not ceasse, for there is no rest.

3 O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe frō heauen, and conside?

3 Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the daughters of my cite.

3 Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.

3 They haue put downe my life in to a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.

3 They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I: now am I vndone.

p I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.

p Thou hast herde my voyce, ⁊ hast not turned awaye thine eares from my sighinge and crienge.

p Thou hast enclnyed thy self vnto me, whē
I called vpon the, ⁊ haist sayde: feare not.

7 Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redemed my life.

7 O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.

7 Thou hast well considred how they go aboute to do me hurte, ⁊ that all their counsels are agaynst me.

7 Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes
(O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginations
agaynst me.

7 The lippes of myne enemies, ⁊ their deuycēs that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.

7 Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.

7 Rewarde them (O LORDE) acordinge to the workes of their hondes.

7 Geue them ⁊ thinge, that their owne herte is afraied of: euen thy curse.

7 Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, ⁊ rote them out from vnder the heauen.

people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernesse: like the Estriches.

7 The tonges of the suckinge children, cleue to ⁊ rofe of their mouthes for very thurst. The yonge children axe bred, but there is noman, that geueth it them.

7 They that were wonte to fayre delicatly, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moch of donge.

3 The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then ⁊ wickednesse of Sodome, that sodely was destroyed,^c and not taken with hondes.

7 Hir absteyners (or Nazarees) were whyter then ⁊ snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.

7 But now their faces are very black:^d In so moch, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones,
It is wythered, and become like a drye stock.

7 They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then soch as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the frutes of the felde.

7 The womē (which of nature are pitfull) haue sodden their owne children^e with their hondes: that they might be their meate, in ⁊ miserable destruction of the daughter of my people.

2 The LORDE hath perfourmed his heuy wrath:^f he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundations therof.

7 Nether the kinges of the earth, ner all ⁊ inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue beleued, that the enemye ⁊ aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalē.

7 Which neuertheles is come to passe for ⁊ synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes bloude within her.

2 So that these blynde men wēte stomblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues with bloude, which els wolde touche no bloudy cloth.

But they cried vnto euery mā: fle the staynynge, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. Yee (sayde they) ye must be brent, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, & byde no longer here.

The countenance of the LORDE hath banyshed them, & shal neuer loke more vpon them: For they them selues nether regarded the prestes, nor pitied their elders.

Wherefore yet oure eyes fayle vs, whyle we loke for vayne helpe: seynge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.

They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we can not go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.

Oure persecuters are swifter then the Aegles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in y wilderness.

The very breth of oure mouth:^a euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe takē in oure synnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his shadowe we shalbe preserued amonge the Heithen.

And thou (O daughter Edom) that dwellest in the londe of Hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be dronckē.

Thy synne is wel punished (O thou daughter Sion) he shall not suffre the to be caried awaye eny more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter Edom) shall he vyset, and for thy synnes sake, he shal lede the in to captiuite.

The v. Chapter.

CALL to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, & oure houses to the aleauntes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bred ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, ^a& we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man delyuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get oure lyuynge with the parell of oure lyues, because of the drouth of the wilderness.

Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an ouen, for very sore hunger. The wyues are raushed in Sion, & the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therefore oure hert is full of heynesse, & oure eyes dymme: because of y hill of Sion that is destroyed. In so moch, that the foxes runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remainest for euermore, and thy seate worlde with out ende: Wherefore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turne thou vs vnto the, & so shal we be turned. ^cRenue oure daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeased at vs.

The Prophet Baruch.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Baruch readeth the boke before the kynge and all the people, which sende money to Ierusalem.

Chap. II.

They knowlege, that they haue deserued punyshment : God promyseth them forgeuenesse.

Chap. III.

They praye hartely beinge in preson, and he exorteth them to amende.

Chap. IIII.

A sermon to the people, with an exortacion to pacience.

Chap. V.

He conforteth them, and sheweth the vocacion of the Heithen.

Chap. VI.

A copie of the epistole, that Ieremy sent to the Iewes, which were led awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

THESE are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yeare the seuēth daye of the moneth : " what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The first Chapter.

AND Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this boke, that Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kynge of Iuda might heare : and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke : yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before ŷ lordes of the counsell and elders : and before the whole people, from ŷ lowest vnto the hiest : before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by ŷ water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a colleccion also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Ierusalem vnto Ioachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon prest, with ŷ other prestes : and to all the people which were with him at Ierusalē, what tyme as they had gotten the ornaments of the temple of ŷ LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might brynge them agayne in to the londe of Iuda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban :

namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had takē Iechonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captiue from Ierusalem vnto Babilon.

And they sayde : " Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferings and incense withall : make you vneleuended bred, & offere for synne vpon the aulter of the LORDE oure God. " And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne : ŷ their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen : that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes : that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne : that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be reheared in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hie dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

Thus shal ye saye : " The LORDE oure God is righteous, but we are worthy of cōfucion & shame : like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Iuda, ⁊ to euery one ⁊ dwelleth at Ierusalem: to oure kinges, prynces, prestes, prophetes ⁊ to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egipte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbeleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto ⁊ LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vtterly, and shrenckinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

¶ Wherefore there are come vpon vs greate plagues ⁊ dyuerse curses,^a like as the LORDE deuyed by Moses his seruaũt: which brought oure forefathers out of the lode of Egipte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mylcke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Neuertheles, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man folowed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offre vnto strainge goddes, and to do euel in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The ij. Chapter.

¶ FOR the which cause the LORDE oure God hath performed his deuyce,^b wherof he certified vs, and oure heades that ruled in Ierusalē: yee and oure kynges, oure princes, with all Israel and Iuda. And soch plagues hath ⁊ LORDE brought vpō vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moses: 'that a man shulde eate ⁊ flesh of his owne sonne, ⁊ the flesh of his owne daughter. Morouer, he hath deluyered them in to the hondes of all the kinges, ⁊ are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) ⁊ scatred thē abrode in all londes ⁊ naciōs. Thus are we brought beneth ⁊ not aboue, for we haue synned against the LORDE oure God, ⁊ not bene obedient vnto his voyce. ^dTherefore ⁊ LORDE oure God is righteous, ⁊ we with oure fathers (as reason is) are brought to opē shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagues ⁊ are come vpon vs allready, ⁊ LORDE had deuyced thē for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto ⁊ LORDE oure God, ⁊ we might euery mā turne frō his vngodly wayes. So ⁊ LORDE hath caused soch plagues to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath comaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner harkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in ⁊ comaundemētes of ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ he had geuē vnto vs.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou 'that hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egipte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wōdres, with thy greate power ād outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy self a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, ^fwe haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnesses. Turne thy wrath frō vs (we beseke the) for we are but a few left amonge the Heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare oure prayers (o LORDE) ⁊ oure peticiōs, ^ebringe vs out of captiuyte, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sight of thē, which haue led vs awaye: ⁊ all lōdes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

^hO LORDE, loke downe frō thy holy house vpon vs: encline thine eare, ⁊ heare vs. For the deed, ⁊ be gone downe to their graues, ⁊ whose soules are out of their bodies, ⁱascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner rightuousmakynge: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakely, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule ascribeth prayse and rightuousnesse vnto the LORDE. O LORDE, we poure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath ⁊ indignacion vpon vs: accordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruaũtes the prophetes, sayenge:

^kThus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre sholders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. And lo, now are they layde out in the heate of \hat{y} Sonne, α in the colde of \hat{y} night, ad deed in greate mysery: with hunger, with swearde, with pestilence α are clene cast forth. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised with an ooth vnto their fathers: Abrahā, Isaac α Iacob: α they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace thē, and not minysh thē. And I wil make another couenaūt with them: soch one as shal endure for euer: namely, \hat{y} I will be their God, and they shalbe my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe \hat{y} I haue geuē thē.

AND now o LORDE allmightie, thou a God of Israel: oure soule \hat{y} is in trouble, α oure sprete \hat{y} is vexed, crieth vnto the: heare vs (o LORDE) α haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before \hat{y} . Thou endurest for euer, shulde we thē vtterly perishe? O LORDE almightie, thou God of Israel: Heare now \hat{y} prayer of \hat{y} deed Israelites α of their childrē, which haue synned before \hat{y} , α not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, for the which cause these plagues hange now vpō vs. O LORDE, remēbre not \hat{y} wickednes of oure forefathers, but thinke vpō thy power α name now at this tyme: for thou art \hat{y} LORDE oure God, α \hat{y} (o LORDE) wil we prayse. For thou hast put thy feare ī oure hartes, to \hat{y} intēt \hat{y} we shulde call vpon thy name, α prayse \hat{y} in oure captiuyte: and \hat{y} we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers, \hat{y} synned before the.

Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuyte, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, because of all their wickednesse and departynge from the.

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: ponde them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thyne enemies lōde? thou art waxen olde in a straūge cōuntre, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? ^aEuē because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bringe their workes to passe? They be roted out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Yonge men haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: nether haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it frō thē. It hath not bene herde of in the lōde of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

30 The Agarenes sought after wisdomē, but that which is earthly, like as the marchauntes of the lōde do. They of Theman are conyngē also, ⁊ they labourē for wisdomē ⁊ vnderstandingē: but ⁊ waye of true wisdomē they knowe not, nether do they thinke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greate is the house of God? and how large is the place of his possession? "Greate is hē, and hath none ende: hye and vmeasurable. What is become of those famouse giauntes, that were so greate of bodyes, and so worthy men of warre? Those had not the LORDE chosen, nether haue they founde the waye of reformation, therefore were they destroyed: and for so much as they had no wisdomē, they perished because of their foolishnesse.

35 Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wisdomē there, ⁊ brought her downe frō the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, ⁊ hath chosen her aboue golde, and so brought her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wisdomē, nether is there eny ⁊ can seke out hir pathes. But he that woteth all thynges, knoweth her, ⁊ he hath founde her out with his fore knowlege. "This same is he which prepared the earth at the begynnyngē, ⁊ fylled it with all maner of foules ⁊ beestes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: ⁊ whē he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth hī with feare. The starres kepe their watch, ⁊ geue their light, yee and ⁊ gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And so with chearfulness they shewe light vnto him ⁊ made thē. This is oure God, ⁊ there shall none other be cōpared vnto him: It is he, ⁊ hath founde out all wisdomē, ⁊ hath geuen her vnto Iacob his seruauēt, ⁊ to Israel his beloued. "Afterwarde dyd he shewe himself vpon earth, and dwelt amonge men.

The iiii. Chapter.

THIS is the boke off the commaundemētes A of God, and the lawe ⁊ endureth for euer. All they ⁊ kepe it, shall come to life: but soch as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Iacob, and take holde of it: walke by this waye, thorow his brightnesse and shyne. Geue not thynne honour to another, and thy worshipec to a straunge people. "O Israel, how happie are we, seige that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaūt vnto him? Be of good cheare, thou people of God, o thou awnciēt Israel. Now are ye solde amonge the Heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruction: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therefore were ye deliuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offerynge vnto deuels and not God. Ye haue forgottē him that brought you vp, ⁊d youre nurse haue ye greued, o Ierusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Herkē o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me in to greate heuynesse: ⁊d why? I se the captiuyte of my people, of my sonnes and daughters, which the euerlastyngē God will bryngē vpon them. With ioye dyd I norish them, but now must I leaue them with wepyngē and sorow.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowe ⁊d forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye : for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put of the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hiest. Be off good cheare, o my children : ^acrie vnto the LORDE, and he shal delyuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue offoure euerlastinge Sauoure.

D With mournynge and wepinge dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neighbours of Sion sawe youre captiuite from God, Euē so shal they also se shortly youre health in God, which shal come on you with greate honoure and euerlastinge worshipe.

E O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shal come vpon you, For the enemy hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruction, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlinges haue gone rough harde wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abroad with the enemies. But be of good cōforte (o my children) ^gcrie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraunce : and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarue from youre God, so shal ye now endeouore youre selues x. tymes more, to ^aturne agayne, and to seke him. For he that hath brought these plagis vpō you, shal brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Ierusalē : for he which gaue ^gthat name, exorteth the so to do.

^cThe wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perish: and soch as haue reioysed at thy fall, shalbe punished. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shal be correcte. For like as they be now glad of thy decaye, so shal they mourne in their owne destruction. The ioye off their multitude shalbe taken awaye ād their cheare shalbe turned to sorowe. The v. Chapter.

O IERUSALEM, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that commeth vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsakē, and that were scatred abroad) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put of thy mournynge clothes (o Ierusalem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshipe and honoure, that commeth vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shal put the cloake off rightousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshipe vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his brightnes, that is vnder the heauen : Yee an euerlastinge name shalbe geuen the of God, with peace of rightousnesse, ^gthy honoure of Gods feare.

B Arise o Ierusalem, stōde vp on hye : loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauynge God in remembrance. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off ^gthy kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute moūtaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fylle the valleys, ^gso to make them eauen with the grounde: ^gIsrael maye be diligēt to lyue vnto ^gthy honoure of God. The woddes ^gall pleasaunt trees shal ouersadowe Israel, at the cōmaundement of God. For hyther shal God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightousnesse, that cōmeth of himself.

A copie off the epistle, that Ieremy the prophet did sende vnto the Iewes, which were led awaye prsoners by the kyng of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was cōmaunded him of God

The vi. Chapter.

BECAUSE of the synnes that ye haue done agaynst God, ^aye shal be led awaye captiue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, vij. generacions: ^gafter that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from thence. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulnes before the Heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

B Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped? "Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddes, y carpēter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but wayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench y loueth peramours is trynly deckte, euen so are these made & hanged with golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, & trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddes therewith. Yet can not these goddes deliuer them selues from rust and mothes. ^aWhē they haue couered them with clothyng off purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

C By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therefore se y ye nether worshipe them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel y a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is spoken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as y dores are shut in roude aboute vpō him, y hath offended the kinge: Or as it were a deed body kepthe besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepthe the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set vp cādels before thē (yee verely and y many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, y the serpentis and wormes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke y is in the temple. The oules, swalowes & byrdes fle vpon them, yee and the cattes runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothinge worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipe them. For yf they fall to the grounde, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, & abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the mēstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therefore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cōmeth it thē, that they be called goddes? The women syt before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodde, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauyng open clothes, whose heades and beerdes are shauen, and haue nothīge vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddes, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garments of the ymages, and decke their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or euell y eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kynge, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them & kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to y fatherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde & syluer, are but euen as other stones, y be hewē of y mountayne. They y worshipe thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees worshipped thē not, hearinge ^y they were but domme & coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, ^y maye not moue. But when these mē come to vnderstōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greате sorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, & burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conveyed awaye, & lye with eny soch as come by: she casteth hir neighburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ^{ad} lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, ^y they are goddes? Carpenters & goldsmithes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thīges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therefore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer thē fro mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodde, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people & kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, & that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe frō wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixte heuen and earth.

Whē there happeneth a fyre in to the house of those goddes of wodde, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape & saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin. They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Morouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde & syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee ^y very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde & syluer frō thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therefore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge & so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he ^y oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone & all the starres when they geue their shyne & light, are obedient, & do men good: When the lightenyng glisteth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, & whē God cōmaundeth the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe frō aboute & cōmaunded, it burneth vp hilles ^{ad} woddes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēgh. Wherefore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for ^y Heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee ^y vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rofe, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therefore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are their goddes of wod, of syluer & golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ^{ad} soone faydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greате cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, ^y hath no ymages & worshipeth none, for he shalbe farre from reprofe.

From this chapter vnto the ende, the prophet seith in a vision the buyldinge agayne of Ierusalem, ad the temple : Whereby is descrybed the mystery off the church off christ, and saluacion of the faithfull in him.

The first Chapter.

IT chaused, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, & I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Ioachims captiuyte. At the same tyme came f worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpō him. "And I loked: & beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which with his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in f myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licknesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sauyng, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

B Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. ^aWhen they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboue: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the sprete led them, thither they wente, ^cand turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaunce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē ŷ beestes wēte forwarde ⁊ backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

E The fashion ⁊ worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute ī their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from ŷ earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the sprete wente, thither wente they also, ⁊ ŷ wheles were lift vp ⁊ folowed thē, for ŷ sprete of life was in the wheles. When ŷ beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, ⁊ were lift vp, for ŷ breth off life was in the wheles.

E Aboue ouer ŷ heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, ⁊ that was spred out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their winges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Aboue the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder ŷ loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre ŷ lightened rounde aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apareth in the cloudes. Euē so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apared. Whē I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The ij. Chapter.

THEN sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. ^aAnd as he was commonyng with me, the sprete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, ^band their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende ŷ vnto a people ŷ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himself hath spoken, ŷ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde housholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

Therefore (thou sonne off man) feare the thē not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: ^cfor they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise ŷ. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwerde housholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto ŷ, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked housholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokinge vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: ^dand the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, ^eand go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, thy bely shal eate, and thy bowels shalbe fylled with $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ boke, that I geue the.

^aThen dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ shewe the $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wordes, that I cōmaunde the: for I sende the not to a people that hath a straūge, vnknowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nacions, which haue diuerse speeches and harde languages, whose wordes thou vnderstōdest not: Neuertheles, $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe $\text{\textcircled{f}}$, for they wil not folowe me: ^dYee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therfore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: $\text{\textcircled{t}}$ that thou mayest feare them $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwerde housholde.

33 He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the prisoners off thy people, speake vnto them, $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the sprete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greate russhinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that rushed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlynge off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ noyse was very greate.

^fNow when the sprete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heuy and a soroufull mynde, but the honde off $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Moneth Abib, I came to the prisoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ and remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

C And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, ^aI haue made the a watch man vnto the house of Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and geue them warnynge at my commaundement.

Yff I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou geuest him not warnynge, ner speakest vnto him, that he maye turne from his euell waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnrightuousnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yff thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsake not his vngodlynnesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go frō his righteousnesse, and do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a stomblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not geuen him warnynge: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhorte the righteous, that he synne not, and so $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ righteous do not synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the hōde off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ I maye there talke with the.

So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth in to the felde: ^aBeholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

^fThen fell I downe vpon my face, and $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ sprete came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy self in thyne house. Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the withall, so that thou shalt not escape out off the. And I will make thy tunge cleue to the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt be domme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate housholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwarde housholde.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THOU sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and descrybe vpon it the cite off Ierusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and ströge diches are grauen on euery syde off it: descrybe also tentes, and an hoost off men rounde aboute it.

Morouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixte the τ ψ cite in steade off an yron wall. Then set thy face towarde it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wynde it. This shal be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certaine dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes.^a Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: Thre hundreth τ xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house of Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house of Iuda.

B A daye for a yeaere,^a a daye (I saye) for a yeaere, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Ierusalem, and discouer thine arme, that thou mayest prophecie agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes of thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell sede, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, accordinge to the nombre of the dayes that thou must lye vpon ψ syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for thre hundreth and XC. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie sycles every daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnyng to the ende.

C Thou shalt dryncke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an Hin shalt thou drynke daylie from the begynnyng to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake the ouer with mas donge, ψ they maye se it. And with that, sayde the LORDE: 'Euen thus shal the children of Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatere them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde: Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bred ouer with all, before the.

And he sayde vnto me: 'Beholde thou sonne off man, I will mynyshe all the prouision of bred in Ierusalem, so that they shall weye their bred, and eate it with scarcenesse. But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bred ner water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The 6. Chapter.

TAKE the then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shaue the hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scoales and the waight, and denyde the hayre a sunder. And burne the thirde parte therof in the fyre in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe.^a As for the thirde parte that remayneth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare knyfe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same, τ bynde it in thy cote lappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest of ψ fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

B Morouer, thus sayde the LORDE God: This same is Ierusalem. I set her in the middest of the Heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgmētes more then ψ Gentiles the selues, and broken my cōmaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as ye with youre wickednesse farre exceede the Heithē, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaūces) Therfore thus saith ȝ LORDE God :

I will also come vpon the, for in the myddest of the will I syt in iudgmēt, in the sight of the Heithen, and will handle the of soch a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. ^a For in the the fathers shal be fayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers. Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the whole remnaut will I scatre in to all the wyndes.

C Wherefore, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) seynge thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy shamefull offences: For this cause wil I also destroye the. Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the.

^b One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of hunger: Another thirde parte shall be slayne downe rounde aboute the, with the swearde: The other thirde parte that remayneth, wil I scatre abrode towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out the swearde after them. Thus wil I perforce my indignacion and set my wrath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which with a feruent gelousy haue spoken it.

D Morouer I will make the waist and abhorred, before all the Heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punysh the in my wrath, in myne anger, and with the plague off my whote displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and wonderinge stocke, amonge the Heithen that lye aboute the.

Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shal come to passe, when I shute amonge them the perious dartes of hōger, which shalbe but death: ^c Yee therfore shall I shute them, because I wil destroye you. I will encrease hunger, and mynish all the prouysion off bred amonge you.

Plages and mysery will I sende you, yee and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pestilence and bloudsheddinge shal come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you. Euen I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The bi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto A me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, ^d turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: Thus hath the LORDE God spoken to the moūtaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will brynge a swearde ouer you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre alters, and breake downe youre temples. Your slayne men wil I laye before youre goddes, and the deed carcasses off the children off Israel wil I cast before their ymages, youre bones wil I strowe rounde aboute youre alters, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, ȝ hillchapels layed waist: youre alters destroyed, τ broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, youre tēpels layde eauē with the groūde, youre owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how ȝ I am the LORDE. Those ȝ amōge you haue escaped the swearde, wil I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatre you amonge the nacions. ^e And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

B As for that whorish and vnfaithfull herte of theirs, wherwith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee τ put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesses ād abhominacions, which they haue done: and shal lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: C Smyte thine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abhominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of thē, they shal perish with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre of, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and ȝ other that are beseged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure

vpō them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē youre slayne men lye amōge youre goddes, and aboute youre autlers: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amōge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols. I will stretch myne honde out vpon them, & will make the londe waiste: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wilderness off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The vij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call, O thou sonne off man. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel: The ende cometh, yee verely the ende cometh vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wrath vpō the, and wil punysh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and rewarde the after all thy abhominaciōs. ^a Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abhominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, & houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at honde, the daye of sediciō is hard by, & no glad tidings vpō the mōū-taynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wrath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

^b Myne eye shal not ouersee the, nether wil I spare the: but rewarde the after thy waies, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how & I am the LORDE, & smytheth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde florisheth, wylfulness waxeth grene, malicious violēce is growne vp, and the vn-godly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complayntē be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:

^c Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sory: for why, ^d Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lyeue. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, & it shal not be hyndered: No mā also with his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trompettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swearde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swearde: ^e and he that is in the cite, shall perish with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the dōues in the felde: euery one shalbe afrayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

^f All hondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyrdeth them selues with sack cloth, feare shal fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: ^g Yee their syluer and golde maye not deluyer them, in the daye of the fearfull wrath of the LORDE.

They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, ^h nether fyll their emptie belies therwith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Ieweles for their pompe and pryde, ⁱ but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Morouer, I will geue it in to & hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to & wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

My face wil I turne from thē, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene ryd-daunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrightuous iudgment of innocent bloude, & the cite is full off abhominacions.

Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell ^k tyrauntes from amonge the Heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, & they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in wayne at their prophetes. ^a The lawe shal be gone from the prestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heuynesse, and ^b hōdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, ^c and accordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the sixte yeaere, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the lordes off the councell off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpō me.

And as I loked vp, I sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downward, ^d and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned maruelous cleare.

This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayrie lockes off my heade, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Ierusalem, in to the court off the inwarde porte that lieth toward the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: ^e euē as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, O lift vp thine eyes, and loke toward the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes toward the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an alter made vnto the ymage off prouocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greates abhominacions that the house off Israel commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the court gate: and whē I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, ^f and loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes ^g and beastes, all Idols and abhominacions of ^h the house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

ⁱ There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes off the councell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iaasania the sonne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censoure in his honde, ^j and outt off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, ^k hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greates abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, toward the north. And beholde, there sat women mourninge for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne ^l ^m aboute, ⁿ and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde court off the LORDES house: ^o and beholde, at the porte off the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the alter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backs vpon the Temple of the LORDE, ^p and their faces toward the east, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house off Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee ^q and purposely to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not oersee them, nether wil I spare them. ^r Yee and though they crye in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The ix. Chapter.

A HE cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, every man with his weapened honde to the slaughter. Then came there sixe men out of the strete of the vpper porte towarde the north, and every man a weapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynnyng rayment, and a wryters ynckhorne by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brasen altar: ^afor the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the thresholde of the house, ^q he called the mā, that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and the writers ynckhorne by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Ierusalem, and set this mark ⁿ Thau vpō the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abominacions, that be done therin. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: ^bKyll, ^q destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this mark ⁿ Thau vpō them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. ^cThen they begane at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wete out and slewe downe thorow ^f cite. Now when they had done ^f slaughter, ^q I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, ^q cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the resydue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Ierusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Iuda is very greate: so that the lōde is full of bloude, and ^f cite full of vnfaithfulness: ^cFor they saye: Tush, ^f LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore will I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and thewriters ynckhorne by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The x. Chapter.

A ND as I loked, beholde, In the firmament that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpō them: ^cThen sayde he that sat therin, to him that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpō the right syde of the house, when the man wete in, and the cloude fylled the ynnermer courte. ^dBut the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Yee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man ^f was clothed in lynnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest of ^f wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth his honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto ^f fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnyng rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of ^f Cherubins, there appeared the licknes of a mā hōde: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins, so that by euery Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to lōke vpon) after ^f fashion of ^f precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned ^q like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they wete all iiii together, not turnyng aboute in their goinge: But where the first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. ^cTheir whole bodies, their backes, their hōdes ^q wynges, yee ^q the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call f wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, a they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar.

C Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: a when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, f wheles were lift vp also with thē, for the sprete of life was in the wheles.

“Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flacked with their wynges, and lift thē selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, a euery one foure wynges, a vnder their winges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had sene them, by the water of Cobar, a so was the countenance of thē: Euery one in his goinge wente straight forward.

The xi. Chapter.

MOROUER, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, a brought me vnto f east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxy men vnder the dore: amōge whom I sawe Iaasaniās the sonne of Asur, a Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked counceyl take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buylde houses: This Ierusalem is the cauldron, a we be the flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophecye vnto them, yee prophecye shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the sprete of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me:

Speake, thus saieth the LORDE: On this maner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginaciōs of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthered in this cite, a filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saieth the LORDE God: B The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, a this cite is the cauldron: ^b But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawē out f swearde, eue so wil I also bringe a swearde ouer you, saieth f LORDE God. I will dryue you out of this cite and delyuer you in to youre enemies honde, a wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therein: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punysh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but ^c haue done after the customes of the Heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpō my face, a cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnaunt in Israel? And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynsfolke, a f whole house of Iuda, which dwell at Ierusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amōge the Gentiles, a scatere you amonge the nacions, a I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, a bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, a I will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: a thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, a all youre abhominaciōs: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, a wil plante a new sprete within youre bowels. ^d That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, a geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinaunces, a do them: that ye maye be my people, and

I youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. ^a So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, ^b & stode vpon the mount of the cite toward the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanyshed awaye fro me. So I spake vnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The xij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: 'Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, ^c & they maye se. Yee eūē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peraduenture they will conside, ^d & they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: & thou thy self shalt go forth also at eūē in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not ^e & earth, for I haue made the a shewtokē vnto the house of Israel. Now as ^f & LORDE cōmaunded me, so I dyd: ^g & gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpō my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, ^h & frauwerde housholde axe thee, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punyshment toucheth the chefe rulers at Ierusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as I haue done, so shal it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go in to captiuyte. ⁱ The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: He shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, ^j and carie him to Babylon, in the lōde of the Caldees: which he shal not se, & yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatere them toward the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them.

So when I haue scatred them amonge the Heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am ^k & LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the Heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fear full treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnessse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Ierusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waiste, for ^l & wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, ^m which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in comynge, ⁿ all the visiōs are of none effecte: Tell them therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: I will make that byworde to ceasse, so that it shall nomore be comonly vsed in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no vision be in vayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I [¶] LORDE speake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwarde housholde) will I deuyse some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: It is farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecietieth. Therefore saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saith the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: & saye thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: "Wo be vnto those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, [¶] that mē might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Vayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachings withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Vayne visiōs haue ye sene, & spokē false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

¶ Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: Because youre wordes be vayne, & ye seake out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saith [¶] LORDE. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out vayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner written in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE God. And that for this cause: [¶] they haue disceaued my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with lowse claye. [¶] Therefore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shuwer of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, & a sore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal [¶] wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wrothfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, & hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for [¶] wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, & make it eauen with the grounde: so that the foundation therof shal remoue, & it shal fall, yee & ye youre selues shall perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. Thus wil I perfourme my wrath vpon this wall, & vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, and then wil I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Ierusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saith the LORDE God. Wherefore (o thou sonne of mā,) set thy face agaynst the daughters of thy people, which prophecie out of their owne hertes: & speake thou prophecie agaynst them, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all arme holes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. ¶ For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, [¶] ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barly, & for a pece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, & promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dyssemble with my people, [¶] ye beleueth youre lies.

Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil also vpō the pillowes, wherewith ye catch the soules in flyenge: theū will I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I teare in peces, & delyuer my people out of youre honde: so that they shal come no more in youre hōdes to be spoyled, & ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. Seinge ȳ with youre lyes ye discomferte the herte of the righteous, whom I haue not discomforted: Agayne: "For so moch as ye corage the honde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, & lyue: therefore shall ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie youre owne gessinges: for I wil delyuer my people out of youre honde, that ye naye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THERE resorted vnto me certayne of ȳ elders of Israel, & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, & go purposely vpon the stomblyng block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then axe counsell at me? Therefore speake vnto them, & saye: thus saith the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stamble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquere eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answer, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne hertes, because they be cleue gone fro me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORDE God: "Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all youre abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth fro me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblyng in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe counsell at me thorow him: vnto ȳ man wil I the LORDE geue answer, by myne owne self.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how ȳ I am the LORDE. "And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punyshed for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to ȳ synne of him that axeth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that ȳ house of Israel be led nomore fro me thorow erreure, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man & beast in the londe. "And though Noe, Daniel and Iob these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their righteousnesse delyuer but their owne soules, saith the LORDE God.

Yf I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only delyuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bringe a swerde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beast in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

Yf I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and beast, and yf Noe, Daniel and Iob were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their righteousnesse.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: "Though I sende my foure trubulous plagues vpon Ierusalem: the swerde, hunger, perious beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beast out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amōge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do mē take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to aszshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therefore thus saieth the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wod: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Ierusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shall go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shall consume them. ^aThen shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waist: because they haue so sore offended, saieth the LORDE God.

The rbi. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Ierusalem their abhominacions, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God vnto Ierusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In ſ̄ daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, ſ̄ stringe of thy navel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed with salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for ſ̄, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, & sayde vnto the: thou shalt be poured from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be censed. ^bSo I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, & waxē greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by ſ̄, & loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee euē the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: ^cYee I made an ooth vnto the, & married my self with the (saieth the LORDE God) & thou becamest myne owne. Then waszshed I the with water, & poured thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the change of raymentes, I made the shues of Taxus lether: I gyrthed ſ̄ aboute with white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the with costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, & set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer & golde, & thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke & of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny & oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou & beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saieth the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, & played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, & hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētēs of dyuerse colours, & deckte thine alters therwith,^d where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. ^eThe goodly ornamētēs & Iewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, & made the mēs ymages therof, and committed whordome withall.

 came also to passe, saith the LORDE God:
 C Thou hast takē thine owne sonnes ¶ daughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: "and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembered the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, ¶ troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saith ¶ LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brodel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aulter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. ¶ Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which had moch flesh: ¶ thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and deluyr the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. ¶ Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, ¶ not had ynough. Thus hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circuncide thine herte (saith the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore:
 buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery strete, and thy brodel houses in all places?
 Thou hast not bene as an other whore, ¶
 maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife ¶ breaketh wedlocke, ¶ taketh other in steade of hir huszbōde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto all thy louers: ¶ offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, ¶ to committe fornicaciō with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, ¶ no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spēt thy moneye, ¶ discouered thy shame, thorow thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: ¶ Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee ¶ all them whom thou fauourest, and euery one that thou hatest: ¶ and will discouer thy shame before thē, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy.
 I wil geue the ouer in to their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre ¶ beutifull Iewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked ¶ bare: ¶ Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, ¶ slaye the downe with their swearde. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to cease, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saith the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, accordinge to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Be-holde, all they ¶ vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a

Thou art euen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir houszbōnde and hir

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on thy right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominations: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

“As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idilnesse: these thinges had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and nedy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: ^atherfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. ^cNether hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therefore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with thy self ^q thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Phillistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynes and abhominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despyed the ooth, and broken the couenaunte. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlasting couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thē: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy daughters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. ^dAnd so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, ^ethou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORDE God.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^ame, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakyng and a parable, ^cvnto the house of Israel, and saye: ^fThus saith the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee with mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a branch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchantes. He toke also a branch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, ^gset it as a wyllye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, ^hspread out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, ⁱrotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spread out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde besyde greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dried vp and withered, yee euen in the shutting out of his blossomes, as soone as ^jeast wynde bloweth?

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: "Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Ierusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours in to Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge: whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hath broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greates hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despyed the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (where as he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despyed, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade.^a I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greates offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of y hoost, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towards all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a branch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greates Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dried vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to florish: Euen I the LORDE y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes,^a and the childres teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith y LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.

^a Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. ^b Yf a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth with no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clotheth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: ^c he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraweth his honde from doinge wronge: he hadleth faithfully betwixte man & man: he walketh in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & perfourmeth thē faithfully: ^d This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue, saith the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer, ^e a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) ^f he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and nedey: he robbeth and spyleth: he geueth not the detter his pledge agayne: he lifeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shalbe vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seith all this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like:

C Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he clealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clotheh the naked: he oppresseth not the poore: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shall lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherefore thē shulde not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therefore: because the sonne hath done equitye and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therefore, shall he lyue in dede.

32 "The same soule y synneth, shall dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf y vngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundemētes, and do the thinge y is equall t right: doutles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shall not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. ³³ For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saieih the LORDE God? but rather that he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, acordinge to all the abhominacions, that y wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shall not be thought vpō: but in the fawte that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

34 And yet ye saye: "Tush, the waye of y LORDE is not indifferēt. Heare therefore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his rightuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynnes: he must dye therin: Yee for the vnrightuousnes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: ³⁵ when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynnes, that he hath vsed, he shall lyue, and not dye.

And yet saieih the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge every man, acordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saieih the LORDE God. "Wherefore, be conuerted, and turne you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō you all youre vngodlynnesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new sprete. Wherefore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel? seynge I haue no pleasure in y death of him that dyeth, saieih the LORDE God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

The xix. Chapter.

BUT mourne thou for the prynces off Israel, t saye: Wherefore laye thy mother that lyonesse, amōge the lyons? t norished hir yonge ones amōge the lyons whelpes? One of hir whelpes she brought vp, t it became a lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The Heithen herde of him, t toke him in their nettes, t brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope t comfort was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, t became a fearece lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folcke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waist: In so moch that the whole londe and euery thinge therin, were vtterly desolate, thorow the very voyce of his roaringe.

36 Then came the Heithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. "So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babilon: which put him in preson, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made staues therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceeded y^e heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was rote out in displeasure, and cast downe to the ground. The East wynde dryed vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, wythered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie ground. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath brēt vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be staues for officers. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The xx. Chapter.

IN the xvij yeare the x daye of the v Moneth, it happened, ^athat certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to axe counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saieith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe eny thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saieith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, & tell thē: Thus saieith the LORDE God: ^bIn the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the sede of the house of Iacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer thē, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lōde amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: ^cCast awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them in to the wilderness: ^dI gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed thē my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and therby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

^eThē I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to cōsume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Heithē, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them in to the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & y^e because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my cōmaundētes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Neuertheles myne eye spared thē, so y^e I wolde not vtterly slaye thē, & cōsume thē in the wilderness. Morouer, I sayde vnto their sonnes in ^fthe wilderness: ^gwalke not in the statutes of youre forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: ^hfor they are a token betwixte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how y^e I am the LORDE. ⁱNotwithstōdinge, their sonnes rebelled against me also: they walked not in my statutes, ^jthey kepeth not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shal lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Thē I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Neuertheles I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Heithē, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatere them amonge the Heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyue, ^a & I vnhalowed them in their owne giftes: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

^b Therefore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, ^c I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicke trees: they made there their offringes, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauours there, & poured out their drinke offerings. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vnclene as youre forefathers, ^d & committe whordome also with their abhominaciōs. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honour ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye thē come, and axe eny question at me? O ye housholde of Israel? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answer of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Heithen, & do as other people in the londe, wod & stone wil we worshipec.

^e As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretchedout arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hōde, with a stretchedout arme & with indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you in to the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished youre forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitation: as for the londe of Israel, they shall not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

^f Go now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blaspheme my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, eue vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipec me: ^g and in the same place will I fauoure them, and there will I requyre youre heaucoffringes, and the firstlinges of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lōde, that I swore to geue vnto youre fore fathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginacions, wherin ye haue bene defyled: ^h and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after my name, not after youre wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of ⁱ LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the south: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil kyndle a fyre in the, ^j & shal cōsume the

The xxi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde Ierusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, ⁊ prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, ⁊ wil drawe my swearde out of ⁊ sheath, ⁊ rote out of ⁊ both the righteous ⁊ the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous ⁊ wicked, therefore shal my swearde go out of his sheath, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawn my swearde out of the sheath, ⁊ it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therefore (o thou sonne of man) ⁊ thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherefore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that commeth, at the which all hertes shall melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth ⁊ shal be fulfilled, saith the LORDE God.

Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened ⁊ wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, ⁊ scoured ⁊ it maye be bright. ^aO, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to ⁊ dightinge, ⁊ good holde maye be takē of it. This swearde is sharpened ⁊ dight, ⁊ it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, ⁊ all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpō thy thee, for, wherefore shulde not the plage ⁊ staff of iudgmēt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, ⁊ smyte thine hōdes together: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, ⁊ man-slayers swearde, that swearde of the greате slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their prey chambers: to make them abaszshed ⁊ faynte at the hertes, ⁊ in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight ⁊ mete for ⁊ slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of ⁊ kinge of Babilō maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make ⁊ a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Ierusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnynge of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: ^cto axe counsell at the soysayers, castinge the lottes with his arowes, to axe counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyuer. But the soysayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Ierusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greате noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batell-rammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, ⁊ to make bulworkes.

Neuertheles, as for ⁊ soysayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be takē and wonne. Therefore saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, ^dwhose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saith the LORDE God: take awaye the mytre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: ^aThus saith the LORDE God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swerde, the swerde, is drawn forth alreedy to the slaughter, & scoured that it glistreth (because thou hast loked the out vanities, & prophecied lyes) ^y it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpo the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne in the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished & borne, and poure my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and delyuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and thy bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

^a MOROUER, the worde of ^y LORDE came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloud-thurstie cite? Shewe the their abhominaciōs, & tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: O thou-cite, ^y sheddest bloude in ^y myddest of the, ^y thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self guilty, in ^y bloude ^y thou hast shed: & defyled ^y i ^y ydols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therefore will I make ^y to be confounded amōge the Heithē, & to be despised in all the lōdes, whether they be nye or farre frō the: they shal laugh ^y to scorne, thou ^y hast gottē the so foule a name, & art full off myschefe. ^bBeholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straūger, in the haue they vexed the wyddowe & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despysed my Sāctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. ^cMurtherers are there in the, that shed bloude, & eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse vnhappynesse.

In ^y haue they discouered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed women in their sicknesse. ^dEuery mā hath dealte shamefully with his neighbours wife, & abhominably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, ^eeuen his fathers daughter: Yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury & encrease, thou hast oppressed thy neighbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORDE God. Beholde, I haue smyten my hondes vpo thy couetousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shall bringe vpon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

^fI will scatre the amonge the Heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lōdes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to cease out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse.^g All they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yro & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will brynge you together vnto Ierusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the furnace, and the fyre blown there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vn clene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: ^hthy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in y. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. "Thy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophecie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorciō and robbery. "They vex the poore and nedy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lōdes behalfe, y I shulde not vtterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therefore wil I poure out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes will I recompence vpō their heades, saieth the LORDE God.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: "These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Ierusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had takē her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: "euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly aray: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: Yee she was made vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Nether ceased she frō the forniciaciō, that she vsed with the Egiptians: for in hir youth they laye with her, they brussed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. "Wherfore, I delyuered her in to y hōdes of hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she so loued. "These discovered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, ād they punyshed her.

"Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ād destroyed herself with inordinate loue, more then she, & exceded hir sister in whordome: she loued y Assirians (which also laye with her) namely, the prynces & greate lordes, that were clothed with all maner of gorgious apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokinge all like prynces (after y maner of the Babiloniās and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediately, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messaūgers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babiloniās came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discovered & sene: "then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembered the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like y flesh of Asses,^a and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renewed the fylthynesse of thy youth, when thy louers bressed thy pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therefore (o Ooliba) thus saieth y LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians:

all yonge and fayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, & a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnesssed aboute the on euery syde, with brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh y before them, yee they the selues shal punysh the, accordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall cary away thy sonnes and daughters, & the resydue shalbe brent in the fyre. They shal strype the out of thy clothes, & cary thy costly Lewels away with them.

D Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthynesse y whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, & cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyuer y in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest: yee euen in to the hondes of them, with whō thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with y : All thy labourer shal they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled thy self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therefore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy honde.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe & farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of thy sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruction & waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out euē to y dregges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For euen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

E Therefore thus saith y LORDE God: For so much as thou hast forgottē me, & cast me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse & whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reproue Oola & Ooliba? Shewe the their abhominaciōs: namely, y they haue brokē their wedlocke, & stayned their hōdes with bloude: yee euen with their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, & offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. ^a Yee & this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sactuary in that same daye, & haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent thy messaungers for men out of farre cōtrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: ^c thou sattest vpō a goodly bed, & a table spred before the: whervpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare with her, & F the men y were sent frō farre cōtrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue braceletes vpon their hondes, & set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also with yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola & Ooliba, those filthy women.

^d O ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, iudge the, punysh them: as aduouters and murderers ought to be iudged and punyshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their sweardes. They shal slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthynes out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnclēnesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: & ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xliiii. Chapter.

IN the ix. yeare, in the x. Moneth, the A x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē ſ̄ houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon set himself agaynst Ierusalē. ^a Shewe ſ̄ obstinate housholde a parable, ⁊ speake vnto thē: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, ⁊ poure water in to it: put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, ⁊ fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, ⁊ an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, ⁊ let the bones seyth well therin.

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: ^b Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of ſ̄ pot, whervpon the rustynesse hāgeth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast therfore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dust. And therfore haue I letten B her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saith ſ̄ LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that bloudthurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou ſ̄ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well sodde, that the bones maye be suckte out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote: that the fylth and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so moch off it: the rustynesse must be brent out. Thy filthynesse is abhominable, for I wolde haue censed the, but thou woldest not be censed. Thou canst not be poured from thine vncleynesse, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuysed: Yee it is come therto alreedy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I will not be intreated: but accordinge to thy wayes ⁊ imaginacions, thou shalt be punyshed, saith the LORDE God.

C And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes with a plague: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore: thou mayest mourne by thy self alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, couer not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I spake vnto the people by tymes in the morninge, and at euen my wyfe dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was cōmaunded. And ſ̄ people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Tell the house of Israel, thus saith ſ̄ LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: euē the glory of youre power, the pleasure of youre eyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre sonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: D Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bred: youre bonettes shal ye haue vpon youre heades, ⁊ shues vpon youre fete. Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre synnes ye shal be soroufull, and one repēte with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shewtokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this commeth) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am ſ̄ LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthē of their bodies: namely, their sonnes and daughters: Thē shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal thy mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be nomore domme: Yee and thou shalt be their shewtokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xrb. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst ſ̄ Ammonites, ^a prophecy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe of Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee ād ouer the house of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye presoners: Beholde, I will deluyr ſ̄ to the people of the east, ſ̄ they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castels and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy mylcke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefolde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine bondes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith ¶ LORDE God: ^aFor so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Iuda, it is but like as all other Gētiles be: Therefore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weaponlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the cōntre: As namely. Betiesimoth, Baalmeō and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, ¶ they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remēbrance amonge the Heithen. Euen thus wil I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: ^bBecause that Edom hath avenged & eased himself vpon the house off Iuda, therefore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beest out off it. From Themā vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpo Edō: they shal hādle him, accordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith ¶ LORDE God: ^cFor so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell wil set them selues to destroye: Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A greате vengeance will

I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The xxvi. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the xi. yeaere, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: ^aThou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Ierusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. Yee therefore saith ¶ LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpo the, I wil bringe a greате multitude off people agaynst ¶, like as whē the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gētiles shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perish with the swearde, ¶ they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will brynge hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kyng off Babilon & a kyng of kynges) from the North, vpo Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a greате multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with ¶ swearde: But agaynst ¶, he shall make bullworkes & graue vp dyches aboute the, & lift vp his shyld agaynst ¶. His slynges & batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, & with his weapēs breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer ¶, they shalbe so many: thy walles shal shake at the noyse of ¶ horse men, charettes & wheles: when he cōmeth to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hōffes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people with the swearde, & breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waist awaye thy riches, & spoyle thy marchaūdis. Thy walles shal they breake downe, & destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre & foundations, shall they cast in the water. Thus wil I brynge the melody of thy songs, & the voyce of thy

C mynstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal no more be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the yee, a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I ꝑ LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Iles shall be moued at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crie of the slayne, ꝑ shal be murthered in the. All kynges off the see shall come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with tremblinge shal they be clothed, they shall syt vpon the grounde: they shal be afraied at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, ꝑ hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, "thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see with thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Iles, yee and the Iles them selues shall stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I brynge the depe vpon the, ꝑ greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to ꝑ pytte: vnto a people that hath bene lōge deed, and set the in a londe ꝑ is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so ꝑ no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in honoure, in the lōde of the lyuynge. I wil make an ende off the, and thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saieth ꝑ LORDE God.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

A THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, ꝑ occupieth with moch people:^a and many Iles: thus speaketh ꝑ LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All thy tables haue they made of Cipre trees off the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they takē Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Okes of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, & of costly wod out of the Ile of Cethim. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egipte, to hāge vpon thy mast: & thy hanginges of yalow sylcke & purple, out off ꝑ Iles of Elisa. They off Sidō & Arnad were thy maryners, & the wysest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mended & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmē occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hanged vpon their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy beuty.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost rōude aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vpon their shildes rōude aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharsis occupied with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greate. Iauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchauntes, which brought the men, & ornaments off metall for thy occupynge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horse, horsmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchautes: and many other Iles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and Paycockes for a present. The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, with whyte lynninge cloth, with sylcke and with Christall.

Iuda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupynge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, Iauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, accordinge to thyne occupynge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quyszhyms. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied with the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchauntes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with \hat{y} and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, τ therefore packte τ boude together with roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off thy markettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupieng.

C Thus thou art full, and in greate worshipec, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But \hat{y} easte wynde shal ouerbear the in to the myddest off the see: so \hat{y} thy wares, thy marchaūdiēs, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shall perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbs shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpon the see, shall leape out of their boates, and set them selues vpon the lōde. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, ād lye downe in the ashes. They shal shaue them selues, τ put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares τ marchaundies came frō the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupieng: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abashed at the, and all their kynges are afraied, yee their faces haue chaunged coloure. The marchauntes off the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art so clene brought to naught, τ cōmest nomore vp.

The xxviij. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre:^a Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: ^a I am a God, I haue my seate in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man τ not God, τ yet stondest in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkest thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from \hat{y} .^c With thy wisdome τ thy vnderstōdinge, thou hast gotte the greate welthynesse, and gathered treasure of syluer τ golde. With thy greate wisdome and occupieng, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therefore thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyrantes of the Heithē: these shal drawe out their swearde vpon thy beuty and wisdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the midst of the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before thē that slaye \hat{y}) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of \hat{y} enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge of Tyre, τ tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a licknesse, full off wysdome τ excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in \hat{y} pleasaūt gardē off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Christall, Iacynete, Onyx, Iaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, τ golde. Thy beuty τ \hat{y} holes \hat{y} be in \hat{y} were set forth in the daye of thy creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amōge the fayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the.^d Because off thy greate marchaundise, thy hert is full of wickednesse, τ thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount of God, (O thou couering Cherub) and destroye the amōge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in thy fayre beuty, τ thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wisdome. I will cast ſ downe to the grounde, & ſ in ſ ſight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sactuary, with the greates wickednesse off thy onrightuous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: ad wil make the to ashes, in the sight of all thē ſ loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the Heithē, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, Prophecie vpō it, and speake. ² Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpō the, & get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ſ LORDE, when I punysh her, & get me honoure in her. For I will sende pestilence & bloud sheddinge in to hir stretes, so ſ those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge brere vnto the house of Israel, ner vnto thē that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scatred: then shal I be sanctified in thē, in ſ sight of the Gētiles: & they shal dwell in the lōde, ſ I gaue to my seruauant Iacob. They shal dwell safely therin, ³ buylde houses, and plante vynyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punyshed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, ſ I am the LORDE their God.

The xxij. Chapter.

⁴ IN the x. yeaere, vpon the xij. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: 'O thou sonne off mā, set now thy face agaynst Pharaō the kyng off Egipte, Prophecye agaynst him and agaynst the whole lōde of Egipte: Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharaō thou kinge of Egipte, I wil vpō the, thou greate whall fysh, ſ lyst in thy waters: Thou ſ sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, & hāge all the fish in thy waters vpō thy skales: after ſ I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee & all the fish of thy waters that hange vpon thy skales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lōde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, & for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of rede to the house of Israel. ⁵ When they toke holde of ſ with their hōde thou brakest and prycest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpō the, thou brakest, ad hurtest the reynes of their backes. Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I will brynge a ⁶ swearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the londe of Egipte shalbe desolate and waist, & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I my self haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waist and desolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriās londe: so that in xl. yeaeres there shall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be desolate amonge other waist countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeaeres, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatere the Egipcians amonge the Heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Whē the xl. yeaeres are expyred, ⁷ I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the nacios, amonge whō they were scatred, and wil bringe the presoners off Egipte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne natyue cowntre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smallest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboute the Heithen: for I will so mynish them, that they shall nomore rule the Heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke thē anymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ad they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yeaere, the first daye of the first Moneth, came ¶ worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labour to come before Tyre: that euery heade maye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost eny rewarde, for ¶ greate trauayle ¶ he hath taken there. Therefore thus saith ¶ LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō, ¶ he maye take awaye all hir substaunce, robbe hir robberies, ād spoyle hir spoyle, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the horne off the house of Israel to growe forth, ¶ open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xxx. Chapter.

A MOROUER, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, prophecy ¶ speake: thus saith the LORDE God: "Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of ¶ LORDE is come: the darcke daye of ¶ Heithē, the houre is at honde, the swearde cometh vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afraied, yee the Morians londe, Lybia ¶ Lydia, all their comon people, ¶ Chub, ¶ all ¶ be confederate vnto thē, shal fall with thē thorow ¶ swearde.

B Thus saith ¶ LORDE: The maynteyners off the lode of Egipte shal fall, the pryde off hir power shal come downe: euē vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe with the swearde, saith ¶ LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, ¶ amōge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, ¶ I am ¶ LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, ¶ when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth fro me in shippes, to make ¶ carelesse Morians afraied: and sorowe shal come vpon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrantes of the Heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swerdes vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slayne men. I wil drye vp their floudes of water, ād sell the lode in to the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all ¶ is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saith the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. ^aThere shal nomore be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulness will I sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for Patures, I wil make it desolate, ād kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punysh, ¶ poure my wrothfull indignaciō vpō Sin, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce off Alexandria will I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliopolis ¶ Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, ād caried awaye captiue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when ¶ pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir daughters shalbe led awaye in to captiuyte. Thus wil I punysh Egipte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

B It happened in the xi. yeaere, vpon the seuēth daye of ¶ first Moneth, ¶ the LORDES worde came vnto me, sayēge: Beholde, thou sonne of mā, I wil breake ¶ arme of Pharao kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be boude vp to be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to holde a swearde. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil vpon Pharao ¶ kinge of Egipte, ¶ brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) ¶ will smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the Heithen, ¶ strowe thē in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength ¶ arme of the kinge of Babilō, ¶ geue him my swearde in his hōde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so ¶ he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

The xxxi. Chapter.

A MOROUER, it happened in the xi. yeare ſ̄ first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: 'Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaō the kyng of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in thy greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre brāuches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Rōūde aboute the rotes of him rāne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer thē all the trees of the felde, and thorow ſ̄ multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he optayned many and longe brāanches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his brāuches, vnder his bowes gēdred all the beastes of ſ̄ felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beautifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his brāanches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaūt garden of God, there was no Fyrre tre like his brāuches, the playne trees were not like ſ̄ bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his brāanches: In so moch, ſ̄ all the trees in the pleasaūt gardē of God, had envye at hī. B Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil deluyr him in to ſ̄ hondes of ſ̄ mightiest amōge ſ̄ Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordige to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the Heithen shall so scatre him, that his brāanches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all ſ̄ foules of ſ̄ ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his brāuches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyennesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be deluyered vnder the earth, and go downe to ſ̄ graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: C In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be soroufull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smyttē. I wil make the Heithen shake at the sounde of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them ſ̄ descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, with all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell with him, vnto thē that be slayne with the swerde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the Heithē. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious & greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder ſ̄ earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne with the swerde. Euen thus is it with Pharaō & all his people, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the xij. A Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpō Pharaō the kyng of Egipte, & saye vnto him: 'Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, & as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest thy waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters with thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus saith the LORDE God: 'I wil sprede my net ouer ſ̄, namely, a greate multitude of people: these shal dryue the in to my yarne, for I will cast the vpō the lōde, and let the lye vpō the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpō the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpō the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyennesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the mōutaynes, & ſ valleys shal be full off the.

“When thou art put out, I will couer the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will sprede a cloude ouer the Sonne, & the Moone shall not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bringe darcknesse vpon thy londe, saith ſ LORD Ezechiel God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccion amōge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afayed thorow ſ, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swerde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at ſ daye of thy fall.

For thus saith the LORD Ezechiel God: the kyng of Babylons swerde shal come vpon ſ, with ſ swerdes of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amonge the Gētiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nomore vpō the waters: so that nether mān fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, sayeth the LORD Ezechiel God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when ſ countre with all that is therin, shalbe layde waist: and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORD Ezechiel God. This is the mournynge, that the daughters off the Heithen shall make: Yee a sorrow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORD Ezechiel God.

In the xij. yere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORD Ezechiel vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee & the mightie people of the Heithē also, & euen with thē that dwell beneth: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amōge those that be slayne with the swerde, shal they lye. The swerde is geuen alredey, he shal be drawen forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, ſ be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with ſ swerde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, & their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne & fell all with the swerde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: altogether wounded and slayne with the swerde, which men afore tyme brought feare in to ſ londe off the luyunge.

“There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swerde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the luyunge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to ſ graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swerde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the luyunge afayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swerde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the luyunge afayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amonge ſ worthies, and vncircumcised Giauntes? which with their weapons are gone downe to hel: whose swerdes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to ſ lōde of ſ luyunge? Yee amōge the vncircumcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swerde.

There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, & which with their strēgh are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Morouer, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to the pytte. Now when Pharaο seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharaο & all his hoost, saith the LORD God. For I haue geue my feare in the lōde of the lyuyng. But Pharaο & all his people shal lye amōge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORD God.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childrē of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their cōtre, and set him to be their watchman: "the same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yff a man now heare the noyse off the trompet & will not be warned, and the swearde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shal be vpon his owne heade: For he herde the sōde of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnyng, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watch man se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amōge thē: the same shal be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

33 And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yff I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnyng, that he maye be warre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deluyered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORD God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moche rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lye. Turne you, turne you from youre vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: "The rightousnes of the rightuous shall not saue him, whan so euer he turneth away vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, whan so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse:

And the rightousnesse of the rightuous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yff I saye vnto the rightuous, that he shall surely lye, and so he trust to his owne rightousnesse, and do synne: then shall his rightousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: "thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne fro his synnes, and do the thinge that is lafull and right: In so moche that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge:

Then shall he surely lye, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moche as he doth now the thyng that is lafull and right, he shall lye. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORD is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

34 When the rightuous turneth from his rightousnesse, and doeth the thyng that is wicked, he shall dye therfore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lafull and right, he shall lye therfore. Yet ye saye: the waye of the LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeaere, the v. daye of the x. Moneth of oure captuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Ierusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: \hat{y} cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so \hat{y} I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of \hat{y} LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, \hat{a} d he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saith the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, \hat{a} nd haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swardes, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto thē: Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, all ye that dwell in this wilderness, shall be slayne with the sward: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilēce. For I wil make the londe desolate and waist, and \hat{y} pōpe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauayle therby.

\hat{a} Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waist and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou sonne off man, the children off thy people \hat{y} talke of the, by the walles \hat{a} d in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after \hat{y} maner of a greate people: yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not thereafter: \hat{e} For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a balet \hat{y} hath a swete tune, \hat{a} d is pleasānt to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. Whē this commeth to passe (for lo, it cometh in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

AND the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophecy agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophecy, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, \hat{a} that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede \hat{y} flockes?

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but \hat{y} flocke haue ye not norished: \hat{e} The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: \hat{y} lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all mōutaynes and vpon euery hylle, yee they be scatred abrode in all felde, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wylde beestes off the felde, haunge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heare \hat{y} worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I my self will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make thē cease from fedyng of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For I will delyuere my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, \hat{e} I will lōke to my shepe my self, and seke them. Like as a shepherde amonge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatred in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the cowntre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall their foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes off Israel.

I will fede my shepe myselff, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: " soch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be wouëd, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will I preserue, and fede them with y thinge that is lafull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, ^d amonge the wethers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture with youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eate y thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap^o y sydes & shulders, and runne vpon them with youre hornes, so longe till ye haue vtterly scatred them abroad. I wil helpe my shepe, so y they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherde: " euen my seruau^t Daud, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruau^t Daud shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddes.

Good fortune & prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. ^d A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodde maye bringe forth their frutes, & y grounde hir increase. They shalbe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brokē their yocke, and deluyered them out of the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore bespoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lode: but safely shal they dwell, & no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so y they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprove of y Heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am with them, & y they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saieth the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: " and I am youre God, saieth the LORDE God.

The xxxv. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE ^a came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face toward the mount Seir, prophecy vpon it, & saye vnto it: " Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist & desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, & thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. ^e For so moch as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, & with a cruel honde hast made them afayed, what tyme as they were troubled & punyshed for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lyue (saieth y LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: ^b seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate & waist, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll with his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shal lye full of them, that are slayne with y swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: y ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE.

B And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nations and both these londes must be myne, & I wil haue them in possession,^a where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will hādle the accordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amōge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyteful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee & multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saith ꝑ LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waist. ^b And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, & knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

A THOU sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel, & speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because youre enemie hath sayde vpon you: A ha, ꝑ hie euerlastyng places are now become ours: prophecie therfore, & speake: thus saith ꝑ LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted & trodē downe on euery syde, & become a possession vnto ꝑ resydue of ꝑ Gētiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes & vnto an euel name amonge ꝑ people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys & dales, to the voyde wildernesses & desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the Heithē: Yee euē thus saith the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuyce, agaynst the resydue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue takē in my lōde vnto thē selues for a possession: which also reioysed frō their whole herte with a despiteful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

B Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto ꝑ mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelousy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye haue suffred reprove of the Heithen, therfore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you wil I turne me, that ye maye be tyllend and sowed. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and ꝑ decayed places shalbe repayed againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes thē euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, ꝑ I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people any more, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from hensforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprove of the nations, ner cast out thine owne people anymore, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of mā, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vnclennesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the Heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lōdes. Accordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punysh them.

¶ Now when they were gone vnto the Heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which & house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therefore tell & house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for youre sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amōge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therefore, I wil halowe my greате name agayne, which amonge the Gētiles is euel spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amōge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith & LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe. ¶ Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, & ye shalbe cleane: Yee from all youre vnclennesse and from all youre Idols shal I cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, & a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony hert, I will take it out of youre body, and ¶ geue you a fleszshy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaudemētes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to youre forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vnclēnesse, I wil call for the corne, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no honger. I will multiplie the frutes of the trees and & increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reprofe of honger amōge the Heithē. Then shal ye remēbre youre owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginaciōs, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abominacions.

¶ But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therefore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal cōse you from all your offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that wēte by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōde is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and brokē downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of & house of Israel, & do this for them: ¶ I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Ierusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THE honde of the LORDE came vpon me, & caried me out in the sprete of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & beholde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these bones maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth in to you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

¶ So I prophecied, as he had cōmaunded me. And as I was prophecieinge, there came a noyse and a greате mocion, so that the bones ranne euery one to another. Now whē I had lokēd, beholde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboute they were couered with skynne, but there was no breth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophecie thou towarde the wynde: prophecy, and speake to the wynde: Thus saith the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayre) from the foure wyndes, & blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me: Then came the breth in to them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their fete, a maruelous greatesorte.

Morouer, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: "oure bones are dried vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therefore prophesie thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulchres, & bringe you in to the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe y I am the LORDE, when I open youre graues, & bringe you out of them. My sprete also wil I put in you, & ye shal lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

C The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a sticke and wryte vpon it: Vnto Iuda & to the children of Israel his companions. Then take another sticke, and wryte vpon it: Vnto Ioseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the housholde of Israel his companions. And than take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stycke therof. Now yf the childre of thy people saye vnto the: wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answer: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, y I wil take the stocke of Ioseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Iuda, & make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wrytest, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them:

D Thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childre of Israel from amonge the Heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of the in y londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall nomore be two peoples from hensforth, nether be deuyned in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle the selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wicked-doinges. I wil helpe the out of all their dwellinge places, wherein they haue synned: & wil so clense them, that they shalbe my people, and I their God.

Dauid my seruauit shalbe their kinge, & they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruauit, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee euē in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childers children dwell for euermore: and my seruauit Dauid shal be their euerlastyng pryncce. Morouer, I wil make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastyng couenaunt. I wil sattle the also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge the for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe with them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the Heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for euer more.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A ND the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face toward Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal: prophesie agaynst him, and saye: "Thus saith the LORDE God: 'O Gog thou chefe pryncce of Mesech and Tubal: beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy chawes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horsmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion: a greates people, that handle altogether speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Perses, Moryans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogorma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Therefore prepare the, set thy self in araye with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and be thou their defence. After many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeaeres thou shalt come in to the lode, that hath bene destroyed with the swearde, & now is replenished agayne with dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue löge lyeu waist. Yee they be brought out of the nacions, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the löde, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

33 Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many things come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myscheffe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor dores) to spoyle them, to robbe thē, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, ȳ is gathered together from amonge the Heithē, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchautes of Tharsis with all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle? to take syluer and golde: to cary away catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophecie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saith the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people with the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sorte. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the löde. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the Heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honoure vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken afore tyme, by my seruantes ȳ prophetes of Israel, which prophecied in those dayes & yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog commeth vp in to the londe of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure I haue deuysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyszshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men ȳ are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be vpon another. With pestilēce and bloude wil I punysh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heithen: that they maye be sure, how ȳ I am ȳ LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THEREFORE o thou sonne of man, 2 prophecie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: ^athou chefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, & carie the forth, & lede ȳ from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I geue the vnto ȳ foules and wilde beastes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so carelesse in the Iles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, ȳ I am the LORDE. 33 I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of enymore: but the very Heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it commeth, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in ȳ cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapens, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arrowes, bylles and clubbess: seuen yeares shall they be burnynge therof, so that they shall els bringe no stickes from ȳ felde, neither haue nede to hew downe eny out of the wodde: For they shall haue weapens ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith f LORDE God.

C At the same tyme will I geue vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauaile therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seuen monethes longe shall the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye cense the lōde: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them. O it shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal ordene men also to be deedburiers, euer goinge thorow the lōde, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be censed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vij monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they se a mans bone, they shall set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shall they make the londe clene.

D And thou sonne of man: thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery byrde, yee and to all the wilde beastes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you rōude aboute vpō my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke bloude. a Ye shal eate f flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate f fat youre bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be droncken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Fyl you at my table, with horses r stronge horsmen: with captaynes and all mē of warre, saith the LORDE God.

E I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the Heithen maye se my iudgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that f house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am f LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the Heithen shal knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte:

it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deliuered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Accordinge to their vnclennesse and vnfaithfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saith f LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captuyes of Iacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them afrayed. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am prayed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete vpon the house of Israel,^b saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

I N the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the a begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that f cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpō a maruelous hie mountayne, whervpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, r sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therefore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde

B rounde aboute the house : the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the staires, & measured the postes of the dore : wherof euery one was a meterodde thicke. Euery chambre was a meterodde longe and brode : betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porche, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ynnmermer dore, which conteyned a meterodde. Thē measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eight cubites, and his pilers two cubites : and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were three on euery syde : alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore : which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xiiij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpō both the sydes, & the chābres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured ſ dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnmermer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto ſ dore, had syde wyndowes : So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

C Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres & paued workes, made in ſ fore courte rōnde aboute : xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a lōge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured ſ bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnmermer courte of the out syde, which had an hundreth cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte towarde the north, measured he after the lēgh and bredth : his thre chābres also on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries : which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites : his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore towarde the east : there were vij steppes to go vp vpō, & their porche before them. Now ſ dore of the ynnmermer courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was towarde ſ north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore towarde ſ south : whose pilers and porches he measured, these had the fyrst measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, ſ bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon : his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnmermer courte stode towarde the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to ſ ynnmermer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde : which he measured, & it had the measure a fore sayde. In like maner, his chābres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, & xxv cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode : and his porch reached vnto ſ vttemost courte : vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, acordinge to ſ measure afore sayde. His chābres, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had : & with his porches he had wyndowes rōnde aboute. The heith was l cubites, ſ bredth xxv cubites : His porches reached vnto the vttemost courte : his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the foresayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute : whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode towarde the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chābre also, whose intrauce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntofferings were waszshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge : to slaye the brentofferings, synneofferings and trespassofferings ther vpon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, whervpon they slaughtered. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntofferings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: whervpon were layed f vessels and ornamente, which were vsed to, the burnt t slayne offeringes, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpon, t vpon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnmer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde f north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.

f And he sayde vnto me: "This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the autler: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the autler stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lēgh of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xli. Chapter.

a AFTER this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, accordinge to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of f dore was x. cubites, t the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thē wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore it self was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lēgh and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres f stode rounde aboute f house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpō another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare thē vp: but in f wall of f house they were not fastened: b The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute f house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hiest t mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambres was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, t so dyd f outwall of the chābers in f house.

Betwene the chambers, was the wydenes xx. cubites rounde aboute f house. The chambre dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north, f other towarde the south: and the thicknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rounde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites lōge also. The wydenes before the house and of it f was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites. c

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chābers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnmer temple, the porch of the fore courte, f syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes them selues were syled ouer with bordes: t thus was it aboute the dore, vnto the ynnmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer with grate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euery betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, f face of a man lookinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made rounde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins d and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboute the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypotes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in y vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The xliij. Chapter.

THEN caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnmer courte, & agaynst the pauerd worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another: And before this chābre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambres were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of y buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therefore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

The wall without that stode by y chambres towarde the vttemost cote vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites lōge: for the lēgh of y vttemost chambers in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambres had vnder them an inтраunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chābers also, which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inтраunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stōde before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offringes: and there must they laye the most holy offringes: meat offringes, synneoffringes & trespaceoffringes, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seynge they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue any thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnmer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with y meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all y foure sydes where there wente a walle rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholly.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO he brought me to y dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, thē came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar." Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to y^e ynnermer courte: & beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

33 I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: "O thou sonne of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fotesteppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: nether thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, & thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholdes in maner harde vpon my thresholdes, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put away their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. Therefore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, y^e they maye kepe & fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

Ⓒ This is the descripcion of the house: Aboue vpō the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe y^e holiest of all. Beholde, that is the descripcion and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the altar (after the true cubite: which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heyth of the altar: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, & the bredth but one cubite.

"The altar was foure cubites hie, & from the altar vpwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the altar was xliij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the easte. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the altar, in the daye whē it is made, to offre burntofferings, and to sprenkle bloude ther vpon. "To the prestes, to y^e Leuites that be of the sede of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: & take the bloude of him & sprenkle his foure hornes withal, & the foure corners of the altar coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: herewith shalt thou cense it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the synoffringe, & burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

Ⓕ The nexte daye, take a gootbuck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the altar withall: like as it was reconciled with y^e bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: "Offre them before the LORDE, and let the prest cast salt therupon, and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burntoffringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, euery daye a gootbucke. A yonge bullocke & a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cense the altar, & offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burntofferings and healthofferings vpō y^e altar: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORDE God.

The xliiij. Chapter.

Ⓖ AFTER this, he brought me agayne to y^e outwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny mā to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. ^aThen brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I loked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligēt hede to all that I wil saye vnto the, concernynge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: pondre well with thine herte the commynge in of the house and the goynge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE ^bGod: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominaciōs, seyng that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary straungers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes & flesh, where thorow my Sactuary is defiled, whē ye offe my bred, fat, & bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenant, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary: but set keepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therefore thus saith ^cȝ LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amōge the childrē of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Leuites that be gone backe fro me, and haue disceaued the people of Israel with errours, goynge after their Idols: therefore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordered to minstre, vnder the dōres of the house of my Sanctuary? and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntofferings and sacrifices for ^dȝ people: to stōde before them, and to serue them: seyng the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stōble thorow wickednesse?

^eFor the which cause I haue plucked out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holiest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce ^fȝ is done therein? ^gBut the prestes ^hȝ Leuites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offe me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORDE God.

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpo myne ordinaunces. Now whē they go in at the dōres of the ynnermer courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whye they do seruyce vnder the dōres of ⁱȝ ynnermer courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge breches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitation of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe ^jȝ people with their clothes.

^kThey shal not shaue their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rōude their heades only. ^lAll the prestes that go in to the ynnmost courte, shall drynke no wyne. They shall mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir huszbonde: but a mayde of the sede of the house of Israel, or a wydowe, that hath had a prest before.

^mThey shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vnholly, betwixte the clene and vnclene. Yf eny discorde aryse, they shal discern it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. ⁿThey shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yf no huszbonde) in soch they maye be defiled.

And when he is clensed, there shal be rekened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synofferinge saith the LORDE God. ^oThey shall haue an heretage, yee I my self wilbe their heretage: els shall ye geue

the no possession in Israel, for I am their possession. The meatoffringe, synoffringe & trespass offering shal they eate, and euery dedicate thinge in Israel, shalbe theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all fre wil offringes shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the prest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prospere the resydue. "But no deed carion shall the prest eate, ner soch as is deuoured of wilde beestes, foules or catell.

The xlv. Chapter.

WHEN ye deuyde the lode by the lott, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORDE,^a to be holy from other londes: namely, xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode. This shalbe holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary v C meteroddes in all the foure corners, and l cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbs. And from this measure, namely of xxv M metteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDE, and go in before the LORDE to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuites that serue in the house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv M lēgh & x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiō of v M meteroddes brode, & xxv M longe, besyde the parte of ♀ Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. "Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuaries parte, & by the cite, there shalbe geuen vnto the prynce, what so euer lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shalbe as longe as one parte, frō ♀ west vnto ♀ east.

This shalbe his owne lode in Israel, that my princes be nomore chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remaineth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel according to their trybes. Thus saiethe the LORDE God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now accordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lafull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth ♀ LORDE God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

"The Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne ♀ tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after ♀ Homer. One Sycle maketh xx. Geras. "So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the Heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one labe from two hundredth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōcile them, sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynk-offrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, brentoffrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōcile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth ♀ LORDE God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemyshe, and cense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of ♀ synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure corners of the aulter, with the doreposts of the ynnerner courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of ♀ moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng diseaused) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon ♀ xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. ♀ Seue dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēded bred be eatē.

Vpon the same daye shal ♀ prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemyshe, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDE: & an he goate daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shall geue euer an Epha to

The xlii. Chapter.

2 THUS sayeth the LORDE God: ƿ̄ dore of the ynnermer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vij. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, ⁊ stonde still without by the dore cheke. So ƿ̄ prestes shall offre vp his burnt ⁊ healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but ƿ̄ dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the prynce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemish, ⁊ a ram without blemish, and an Ephā for a meatoffrynge, with ƿ̄ ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, ⁊ an Hin of oyle to an Ephā. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke with out blemish, sixe lambes ⁊ a ram also without blemish. With the bullocke he shal geue an Ephā, and with the ram an Ephā also for a meatoffrynge: but to ƿ̄ lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Ephā. When the prynce cometh, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at ƿ̄ north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall go in and outamonge them.

3 Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatoffrynge: An Ephā to a bullock, and an Ephā to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but euer an Hin of oyle to an Ephā. Now when the prynce bryngeth a burntoffrynge or an healthoffrynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, ƿ̄ he maye do with his burnt ⁊ healthoffrynges, as he doth vpon the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yere olde without blemish for a burntoffrynge: this shall he do euery mornynge. And for a meatoffrynge he shal geue the sixte parte of an Ephā, ⁊ the thirde parte of an Hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery mornynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatoffrynge vnto the LORDE, for an euerlastinge ordinance: ⁊ thus shal the lambe, the meatoffrynge and oyle be geuen euery mornynge, for a dailie burntoffrynge.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Yf the prynce geue a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, ƿ̄ he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruantes some of his heretage, *it shall be his to the fre yere, and thē to returne agayne vnto ƿ̄ pryce: †for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put thē from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abrode, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intraunce 2 at the syde of the dore to ƿ̄ habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to ƿ̄ prestes and stode towarde the north, ⁊ beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespase and synoffrynges, ⁊ bake ƿ̄ meatoffrynges: that they nede not beare thē in to the outward court, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vtmost court, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of ƿ̄ fore court, there was yet a litle court. Yee in all the foure corners of the court, there was made a litle court of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, ⁊ there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offerynges of the people.

The xlvij. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me agayne before the dore of the house: ¶ beholde, there guszshed out waters from vnder y^e postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode toward the east) that ranne downe vpō the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the aulter south warde. Thē caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, y^e turneth eastwarde. Beholde, “there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man y^e had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, ¶ thē he brought me thorow y^e water, eūē to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, ¶ brought me thorow y^e water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, y^e I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, o thou sonne of man? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bācke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out toward the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, ¶ maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cōmeth, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this riuer shal the fyszsers stonde from Engaddi vnto En Eglaim, ¶ there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, nether shal their frute perish:^a but euer be rype at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherin ye shall deuyde the londe vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lōde I swore vnto youre fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauerā. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Haueran and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Iordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Tamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, “the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greate see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, according to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straungers that dwel amōge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childrē of Israel, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saith the LORDE God.

The xlvij. Chapter.

THESE are y^e names of the trybes that lye vpon the northsyde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou comest vnto Hemath and Hazar Enam, the borders of Damascus toward the north besyde Hemath: Dan shal haue his porciō from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Asser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Asser frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porciō of xxv. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west,) wherin the Sanctuary shal stōde.

As for the porcion, that ye shal^a separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxv. M. & towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, & towarde the south xxv. M. longe, wherin the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, & are of the childrē of Sadoch, & haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, harde vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxv. M. lōge and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porciō they shal sell nothings, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

The other v. M. after the bredth, & lyeth by the xxv. M. shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbs for habitacions, and & cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde & north parte, v. C. & iiij. M: towarde the south parte, v. C. & iiij. M: towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde & west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbs harde vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C: towarde the south, L. and two C: towarde the east, L. and two C: towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porciō: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that labour in the cite. They that labour for the welth of the cite, shall manteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

^a Eze. 45. a.^b Eze. 45. d. and 44. c.

All that is separated of the xxv. M. longe and xxv. M. brode on the foure partes, & shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, & for the possession of & cite. The resydue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the prynces, before the place of & xxv. M. vnto the east ende, & before the place of & xxv. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of & cite: this shalbe & prynces porciō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Morouer, from the Leuites and the cities possession, & lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remayneth betwixe the border of Iuda & the border of Ben Iamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Iamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Iamin frō the east syde vnto & west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeō from the east parte vnto the west, shal Isachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Isachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar forth vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

This is & lōde with his porciōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Israel, saith & LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte v C and iiij M measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Israel. Thre portes of & northsyde: One Ruben, another Iuda, the thirde Leui.

Vpō & east syde, v C & iiij M measures, with & thre portes: The one Ioseph, another Bē Iamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde v C and iiij M measures, with the thre portes: the one Symeon, another Isachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde v C and iiij M measures, with thre portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde Nephtali. Thus shal it haue xvij M measures rōude aboute. And from that tyme forth, & name of the cite shal be: the LORDE is there.

Certaine reuelacions of thynges for to come : some, of the delyueraunce frö the captiuyte of Babilon : some, of the destrucción of Ierusalem : some, concernynge the latter dayes.

The first Chapter.

A N y^e thirde yeare of y^e raigne of Ioachim kynge off Iuda, "came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Ierusalem, & beseged it: and the LORDE delyuered Ioachim the kynge off Iuda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried away vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god, and there brought them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes y^e chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of prynces, yöge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre ad wellfaoured, instructe in all wisdome, connynge and vnderstödinge: which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he drancke himselff, so to norish the thre yeare: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Iuda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himselff, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, ^bner y^e wyne which he dröke. And this he desyred off the chefe chäberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before ¶ chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, ad so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto ¶ kynge.

C Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, ad proued thē x. dayes. And after ¶ ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge ¶ fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynges meate.

D Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes counnyng and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstandinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none such as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therefore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstōdinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, thē all the soysayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yere of kynge Cyrus.

The ij. Chapter.

A IN the secōde yere off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, "where thorow his sprete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge cōmaunded to call together all ¶ soysayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, ¶ my sprete was so troubled therewith, ¶ I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answeere, ad sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstode the dreame with the interpretation theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be prysed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanynge therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the signification of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

B Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceaue off a treuth, that ye do but prolōge ¶ tyme: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therefore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye fayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyme. Therefore tell me the dreame, ad so shall I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it meaneth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answeere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which ¶ kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner lorde, that euer axed soch thinges at a soysayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyreth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddess: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

C For ¶ which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and ¶ proclamacion wēte forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynges stewarde, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth alreedy to kylle soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclamed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kinge, ¶ he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretacion: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Asarias his companiōs: ⁊ they shulde beseke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other such as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel prayned ⁊ God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be prayned for euer and euer, for wysdome and strength are his owne: " he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde: he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth ⁊ thynges that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him.^a I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter vnto me.

¶ Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not such as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kyng, and I shal shewe the kyng the interpretacion. Then Arioch brought Daniel in to the kyng in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, ⁊ shal shewe the kinge the interpretacion. Thē answered the kyng, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, ⁊ cāst shewe me ⁊ dreame, which I haue sene, & the interpretacion therof? Daniel answered the kyng to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisicion: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell coniuurer, that can certifie the kyng off it: Only God in heauē cā open secretes, & he it is, that sheweth the kinge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kyng, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other luyunge: but only that I might shewe the kyng the interpretacion, & that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kyng sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone " which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake thē to powder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from ⁊ somer floores, that they cā nomore be foude. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kyng, what it meaneth.

" O kyng, thou art a kyng off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kyngdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: & hath deluyered the all thinges, that are amōge ⁊ children off men: the beastes off the felde, ad the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that goldē heade. After ⁊ there shal aryse another kyngdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrde kyngdome shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth kyngdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes off the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieth: that it shalbe a kyngdome partly stronge and partly weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues with ⁊ sede off symple people, & yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be soldered with a potsherde.

¶ In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone,^a which brake the yron, the copper, y^e earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath y^e greate God shewed the kyngye, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kyngye Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat-offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kyngye answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kyngye made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lordes of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kyngye for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kyngye.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ NABUCHODONOSOR the kyngye caused a goldē ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon^g sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites & shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: y^e they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kyngye had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them to gether, and came vnto the dedicatyng of y^e ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kinge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out with all his might: O ye people, kynreddes and tinges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, with y^e harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, y^e Nabuchodonosor the kyngye hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kynreddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyngye had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused y^e Iewes, and sayde vnto kyngye Nabuchodonosor: O kyngye, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beyng kyngye hast geuen a commaudemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certayne Iewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces of the londe off Babilon:^c namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kyngye) regarde not thy cōmaudemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, y^e Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kyngye. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, be redy hereafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trōpettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y^e other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yf ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, [†] maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kyng, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto [‡] in this matter, for why: "oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kyng) and can right wel delyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (o kyng) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that [‡] countenance of his face chaunged vpō Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charched and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wōte to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ad cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kynges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceedynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in [‡] hote burnynge ouen,[§] beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kyng marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his counsell and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kyng: Yee o kyng. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: "and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wēte Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruauntes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counsell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies:[¶] In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vnchaunged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: "Blessed be the God of Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, ad defended his seruauntes, that put their trust in him: [‡] haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies thervpon: rather then they wolde serue or worshippe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaūde, that all people, kynredes & tungen, which speake eny blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe prysed: Because, there is no God [‡] maye saue, as this. So the kyng promoted Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

[§] Nabuchodonosor kyng, vnto all people, kynredes and tungen that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amōge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokēs & maruelous workes, [‡] [‡] hye God hath wrought vpon me. [¶] O how greate are his tokēs, & how mightie are his wonders? His kyngdome is an euerlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for euer and euer.

The iiii. Chapter.

I NABUCHODONOSOR beyng in rest in myne house, ad florishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afraied: ad the thoughtes that I had vpō my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. "Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wiszdome at Babilō shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretacion of the dreame. So there came the soysayers, charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, accordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of saythsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from the: tel me therefore, what [‡] visiō of my dreame ([‡] I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mightie: ⁊ heyth reached vnto the heauē, and the bredth extended to all the endes of the earth: his leaues were fayre, he had very moch frute, so ⁊ euery mā had ynough to eate therin.

The beastes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed of it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: ⁊ beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightely, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his braunches, shake of his leaues, and scatre his frute abroad: that all the beestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the gronde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the gronde with other wyld beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundemēt grounded and sought out in the council off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, ⁊ I kyng Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for ⁊ sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ⁊d his thoughtes troubled him. So the kyngge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my lorde, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate ⁊ mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ⁊d the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitation, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kyngge) art the tre, greate ⁊ strōge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, ⁊ reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kyngge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the gronde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kyngge) is ⁊ interpretaciō, yee it is the very deuyce of him, ⁊ is hiest of all, ⁊ it toucheth my lorde the kyngge.

Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ox. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom he lyst. Morouer, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be left still in the gronde: it betokeneth, ⁊ thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto ⁊, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherefore (o kinge) be cōtēt with my counsel, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, ⁊d thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kyng Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kyngge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilō, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power ⁊ strength) haue made a kynges cōurte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whye these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ox, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vpō Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mēs cōpany, & ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greate as Aegles fethers, and his nales like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderstandinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thanks vnto the hiest. I magnified and praysed him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth allwaye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, ^aare to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth acordinge to his will, amōge [†]powers of heauen [†]& amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: ^cwhat doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kingdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshippe.

Thē dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loaue, magnifie and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The b. Chapter.

BALTHASAR the kyng made a greate banquet to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken with wyne, he commaunded to brynge him [†]golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Ierusalem: ^dthat the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drike therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDES house at Ierusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde writynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of [†]honde [†]y wrote. ^eThen chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherefor the kyng cryed mightely, ^fthat they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytynge, ner shewe the kyng what it signified. Thē was the kyng sore afrayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, [†]y had happened to the kyng & his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the banquet house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer: Let not thy thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the sprete off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstondinge [†]ad wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kyng Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chefe of the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and deucl coniurers: because that soch an abundaunt sprete, knowlege & wisdome (to expōde dreaumes, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kinge. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the presoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Iewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdome founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and conynge charmers, to rede this wrytynge, and to shewe me the meanynge theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, [†]y thou canst expounde darcke thinges, and declare harde doutes.

Well than, yf thou canst rede this writinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

D Daniel answered, and sayde before y kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue thy ryche giftes to another: "yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytyng vnto y kyng, and shewe him the interpretation therof. O kyng, God the hyst gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, ^b y dignite of a kyng, with worshippe & honoure: so y all people, kynredde & tungen stode in awe & feare of him, by reason off the hie estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. ^c But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulnesse: he was deposed from his kyngly throne, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellyng was with the wylde Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyst had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

E And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self aboute the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast prayed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, ^d in whose honde consisteth thy breth ad all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therefore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytyng. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretation off the thyng is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to light: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth

Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. "The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng lxij. yeare off age.

The vi. Chapter.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kigdome ^a an C. and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kingdome aboute. Aboute these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vndiseased.

But Daniel exceeded all these princes ad lordes, for the sprete off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherefore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte vpon him. For why: he was so faythful, y there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

B All the great estates off the realme: as y prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off y kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyareth eny peticion, ether of eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast in to the Lyons denne. Wherefore, o kyng, confirme thou this statute, and make a wrytyng: that the thyng which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytyng, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytyng was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall toward Ierusalem stode open. There kneled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his petition, and prayed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his petition, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kynge, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kynge, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyren his petition off any god or man, but only of thyself, o kynge: he shalbe cast in to the denne of the Lyons? The kynge answered, ad sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of ¹ Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kynge: Daniel one of the presoners of Iuda (O kynge) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petition thre tymes a daye. When the kynge herde these wordes, he was sore greued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to delyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wete downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kynge) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kynge maketh, maye not be altered. ² Then the kynge bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him in to the Lyons denne.

The kynge also spake vnto Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kynge sealed with his owne rynge, and with ³ signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kynge wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But be tymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kynge arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto ⁴ denne, he cried with a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee ⁵ kige spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruauit off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to delyuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer:

⁶ My God hath sent his angel, which hath shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne vngiltynesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kynge) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kynge excedinge glad, ad commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the denne, and no maner of hurte was founde vpō him. For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kige commaunded to bringe them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: ⁷ them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mastry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.

⁸ After this, wrote kynge Darius vnto all people, kynnedes and tungen, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominiō and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

⁹ For he is the lyuinge God, which abydeth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is euerlastynge. It is he that delyuereth, and saueh: ¹⁰ he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth: he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the Lyons. ¹¹ This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cirus of Persia.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the first yere off Balthasar kynge off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe off the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of ¹ heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlike another.

The first was as a lyon, and yet had he Aegles wynges. ² I sawe, that his wynges were plucte from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, ³ and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde best was like a Beer, and stode vpon the one syde. ⁴ Amonge his teth in his mouth he had iij. greate lōge teth and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eate vp moch flesh.

Then I loked, ⁵ and beholde, there was another like vnto a Leoparde: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, ad there was power geuen him. ¹³ After this I sawe in a vision by night, & beholde: the fourth beest was grymme and horrible, and maruelous stronge. It had greate yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlike the other beestes that were before it: ² for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge thē, another like horne, before whom there were thre of the first hornes pluckte awaye. Beholde, this horne had eyes like a mā, & a mouth speakynge presumptuous thinges. ³ I looked till the seates were prepared, ad till the olde aged sat him downe. His clothinge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

His trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnynge fyre. There drew forth a fire streame, & wente out from him. ⁴ A thousand tymes a thousande serued him, x. M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgmēt was set, and the bookes opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that horne spake.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, ⁵ & geuen ouer to be brent in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by night, and beholde: ⁶ there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power ad dignite regall, ⁷ that all people, trybes and tungen shulde serue him. His power is an euerlastinge power, which shal neuer be put downe: & his kyngdome endureth vncorrupte. ⁸ My herte was vexed, & I Daniel had a troubled sprete within me, ad the visions off my heade made me afraied: ⁹ till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretaciō of these thinges.

These foure greate beastes, are foure kinges which shal aryse out of the earth. These shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more & more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlike the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the resydue vnder his fete. ⁴ I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face there fell downe thre: which horne had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and looked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same horne made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee ad gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuē to the chefest sayntes: and till the tyme, that ⁵ sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kingdome vpo earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shal deuoure, treade downe ad destroye all other londes.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest, and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. ⁷ They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and halff a tyme.

But the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, ⁸ whose kyngdome is euerlastinge, yee all powers shall serue and obeye him. Thus farre extēde ⁹ my wordes.

Neuerthelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance chaunged, ¹⁰ but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The viij. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare off the raigne of kinge Balthasar, there apearead a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. " I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in $\frac{v}{i}$ vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Vlai.

Then I loked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyst came vp last. I sawe that this ramme puszhed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcelly vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very feare vpon him: yee he gaue him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Nether had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to delyuer the ramme out of his power.

33 The goate waxed excedinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, towarde the foure wyndes off the heauen. ^b Yee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prospere in all thinges, that it went aboute. Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes speakynge, which saynte sayde vnto one that axed this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynge τ the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hūdreth dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clensed agayne.

Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afraied at his cōminge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakynge vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kyng off the Medes ad Perses: but the goate is the kyng off Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the pryncipall kyng. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodlynnesse is a growinge) there shall aryse a kyng off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakenges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynes, falsede shall prospere in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shalbe destroyed without honde. ^aAnd this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the evenyng and the morninge. Therefore wryte thou vp this sight, ^bfor it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very faynte, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes : but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuerthelesse no man knewe of it.

The ix. Chapter.

IN the first yere off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, ^cwhich was of the sede off the Medes, ^dwas made kyng ouer the realme off the Caldees : Yee euen in the first yere off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombre out of the bokes, ^ewherof the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet : that Ierusalem shulde lie waist lxx. yeres : ^fad I turned me vnto God the LORDE, ^gfor to praye and make myne intercessio, with fastinge, sack cloth ^had ashes I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowleged, sayenge :

O LORDE, thou greate ⁱand fearfull God, thou that kepest couenaut and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaundementes : ^jWe haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe : yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and iudgments.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure fore fathers, and to all the people off the londe. ^kO LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothyng but open shame : as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man off Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem :

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye : thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

Yee o LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kinges ^land prynces, to oure fore fathers : euen to vs all, that haue offended the, ^mbelongeth open shame.

33 But vnto the o LORDE oure God, pertayneth mercy and forgeuenesse. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes : ⁿ'yee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not herkened vnto thy voyce.

^oWherefore the curse and ooth, that is written in the law of Moses the seruaut of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, ^p'which he spake agaynst vs, ^qand agaynst oure iudges that iudged vs : to bringe vpon vs such a greate plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Ierusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath ^rthe LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs : for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth : for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, o LORDE oure God, thou that ^swith a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egipte, to get thy self a name, which remayneth this daye : we haue synned (o LORDE) ^tand done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes : yet let thy wrothfull displeasure be turned awaye (I beseeke the) from thy cite Ierusalem thy holy hill. And why ? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers : is Ierusalem and thy people abhorred, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therefore (O oure God) heare the prayer of thy seruaut, and his intercession : ^uO let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, enclyne thine eare, and herken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes : beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name : For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne rightuousnesse, no : but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare : O forgeue LORDE : O LORDE conside, tary not ouer longe : but for thine owne sake do it, O my God : for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakinge at my prayers, ^vknowleginge myne owne synnes and ^wthy synnes of my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy hils sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde, the mā Gabriel (^awhom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute [†] offeringe tyme in the euenynge. He in-fourmed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstonde it: For as soone as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therefore am I come to shewe the. ^bAnd why? for thou art a man greatly beloued.

Wherefore, ponde the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstonde the vision. Lxx. wekes are determined ouer thy people, [†] ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse may be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge rightuousnesse, to fulfill [†] visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marcke it well: ^cthat from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Ierusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) prynce: there shalbe seuen wekes. Then shall the stretes [†] walles be buylded agayne lxij. wekes, but with harde troublous tyme. After these lxij. wekes, shal Christ be slayne, [†] they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meatoffringe. ^dAnd in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolaciō, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, [†] this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende.

The x. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare of kinge Cirus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee^a a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceived what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre wekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynte my self, till the whole thre wekes were out.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greате floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and lokod: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnyng, ^ewhose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chrisolite stone, his face (to loke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like fayre glistering metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like [†] voyce of a multitude.

^fI Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greате fearfulness fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greате vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure clene, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: [†] as soone as I herde it, fayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees [†] vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: ^gO Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto [†], [†] stode right vp, for vnto [†] am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp tremblinge. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstonde, and didest chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou beganest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses with stonde me xxj. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chefe prynces, ^hcame to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, [†] am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to [†] grounde, and helde my tunge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lorde, my ioynates are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgh within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lorde? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I can not take my breth? Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moch like a man, & confortd me, sayenge: "O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recovered, & sayde: Speake on my lorde, for thou hast refreszshed me. The sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto [¶]? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, [¶] is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael youre prynce.

The xi. Chaptr.

AND in the firste yere of Darius of Media, I stode by him, to conforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stonde vp yet three kynges in Persia, but [¶] fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chefest power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with greate dominion, and do what him list. [¶] And as soone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & [¶] deuyded towarde [¶] foure wyndes of the heauen. They [¶] come after him, shall not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee euen amonge other the those. And the kyng of [¶] south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself ströge, & shal rule his dominiö with greate power.

But after certayne yeares they shalbe ioyned together, & the kynges daughter of the south shal come to the kyng of the north, for to make fredshippe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shall she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & soch as brought her (yee & he [¶] begat her, & confortd her for his tyme) shalbe deluyered vp. B Out of [¶] braunches of hir rote, there shal one stonde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly

Jewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captuyes in to Egipte, and he shal preuayle agaynst the kyng of the north certayne yeares. And when he is come in to [¶] kynges realme of [¶] south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sonnes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterfloude: then shal he returne, and go forth with defyenge and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

The kinge of [¶] south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: Yee he shall bringe a greate multitude of people together, and a greate heape shalbe geuē in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye with greate pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shall not preuayle. For [¶] kinge of [¶] north shal gather (of the new) a greate heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeares) with a mightie hoost & exceedinge greate good.

At the same tyme there shall many stonde C vp agaynst the kinge of the south, so that [¶] wicked children of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kinge of the north shall come to laye sege, and to take the ströge fensed cities: And the power of the [¶] south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shall not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shall handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardy as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stöde in the pleasaunt countre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face with all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amöge women, to destroye him. But he shal fayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shall he set his face vnto the Iles, & take many of the. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confucion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stömble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that nether in wrath ner

D in batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holdē worthy of a kinges dignite: this shall come in craftely, & optayne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after \hat{y} he hath taken truce with him, he shal hādle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouer come him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to \hat{y} fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, \hat{y} they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substaunce: ymagenyng thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterred vp with a greate armye agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kinge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greate & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shall conspyre agaynst him. Yee they \hat{y} eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynded to do myschefe, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: ^afor why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme apoynted. Thē shall he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greate good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme apoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shall it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythin shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: ^b \hat{y} he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

¶ He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strēth, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolation. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flate with fayre wordes. But \hat{y} people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstandinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyte & with the takynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstondynge shal be persecuted also: \hat{y} they maye be tryed, purified & clēsed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme apoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God.^c Yee he shall speake maruelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so ^dlonge till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuyssed alredy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shall be vpon womē: Yee he shal not care for eny God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipe the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Iewels.

This shal he do, sekinge helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge goddes. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshippe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greate nauy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also in to the fayre pleasaunt londe. ^eMany cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Iewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. ^fNeuerthelesse the tydings out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall he pych betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary,^g for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The iij. Chapter.

A THE tyme wil come also, that the greate prynce Michael,^a which stondesth on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble,^b soch as neuer was, sens there begāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deliuered, yee all those that be foude written in the boke. ^c Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame & reprove. ^d The wyse (soch as haue taught other) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructe the multitude vnto godlynesse, shalbe as the starres, worlde without ende.

B And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and thē shal knowlege increase. So I Daniel loked, and beholde, there stode other two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of thē sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lynnynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: How longe shall it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? ^e Then herde I the man with the lynnynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his right and left honde vnto heauen, & sware by him which lyueth for euer: that it shal tary for a tyme, two tymes & half a tyme: & when the power of the holy people is clene scatred abroad, thē shal all these thinges be fulfilled.

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. ^f Then sayde I: O my lorde, what shal happen after that? He answered: Go thy waye Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp & sealed, till the last tyme: & many shalbe purified, clensed & tried. But the vngodly shall lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of thē as they be) shal haue no vnderstandinge. ^g As for soch as haue vnderstandinge, they shal regarde it. And from ^h tyme forth that the daylie offerynge shalbe put downe & the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shalbe a thousande two hūdreth & xc. dayes. O well is him, that waiteth, & commeth to the thousande iij. C. & xxxv. dayes. Go thou thy waye now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byde in thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

Chap. VIII

Idolatry in Samaria and Israel.

Chap. IX.

Punyszment vpon Israel for Idolatry.

Chap. X.

The vnthankfulnesse of Israel. The calfe in Samaria, for the which and soch like abhominacions, he telleth them of destruccion.

Chap. XI. XII.

God calleth them agayne, with rehearsinge his benefites done to them afore.

Chap. XIII.

He sheweth them their wickednesse, and punyszment for the same.

Chap. XIII.

He crieth and exorteth the people to conuerte, promisyng swetely and louyngly to receaue them.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Beeri, in the dayes of Osias,^a Ioathan, Achas & Ezechias kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Ieroboam the sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel.

The first Chapter.

FIRST, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childrē by her: ^bfor the lōde hath cōmitted greate whoredome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer ^y daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: ^ccall his name Iesrael, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Iesrael vpon the house of Iehu, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Iesrael.

She concealed yet agayne, and bare a doughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Loruhamā (that is, not opteyninge mercy)^a for I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them clene out of remembraunce. ^b Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, & wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not delyuer them thorow eny bow, swearde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Loruhamā, she concealed agayne, & bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Amī (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therefore will not I be yours. ^c And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be ^d fy childrē of the Iuynge God. ^e Then shal the children of Iuda and the childrē of Israel be gathered together agayne, & chose them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greateshalbe the daye of Iesrael.

The ij. Chapter.

TELL youre brethren, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for youre mother, ye shal chyd with her, and reprove her: for she is not my wife,^f nether am I hir huszbōde: vnlesse she put awaye hir whordome out of my sight, and hir aduouty from hir brestes. Yf no, I shal strype her naked, & set her, euen as she came in to ^g fy worlde: ^h Yee I shal laye hir waist, and make her like a wildernes, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal haue no pite also vpon hir children, ⁱ for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to cōfucion. ^j For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bred, my woll & my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir fotestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: ^k she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first huszbonde, for at ^l y tyme was I better at ease, then now. ^m But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her corne, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

ⁿ Wherefor now will I go take my corne & wyne agayne in their season, and fet agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. ^o And now will I dyscouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir louers, and no man shal delyuer her out of my hondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrth,^p hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I will destroye hir vynyards and fyge trees, though she saieth: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wyld beestes shall eate it vp: I wil punysh her also for the dayes of Baal,^q wherein she censured him, deckyng him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saieth the LORDE.

Wherefor beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frendly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyards agayne,^r yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope & comforte. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, & like as in the daye ^s when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saieth the LORDE) ^t she shal saye vnto me: O my houszbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. ^u Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wylde beastes, with the foules of the ayre, & with euery thinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

^v As for bowe, swerde and batel, I will destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them to slepe safely. ^w Thus wil I mary the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I mary the, in rightuousnesse, in equitye, in louynge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I mary the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme will I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto y^e heauens, saith the LORDE: ⁊ the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Iesrael. I wil sowe them vpō earth, for a sede to myne owne self, ⁊ wil haue mercy vpon her, y^e was without mercy. And to thē which were not my people,^a I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The iij. Chapter

¶ THEN sayde y^e LORDE to me: ^aGo yet thy waye ⁊ wowe an aduouterous womā, whō thy neighbour loueth, as y^e LORDE doth the childrē of Israel: how be it they haue respecte to straunge goddes,^b and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluerlinges, and for an Homer and an half of barley, ⁊ sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, ⁊ then wil I kepe my self for the.

¶ Thus the childrē of Israel shal syt a greate whyle without kinge and pryncce,^c without offerynge and aulter, without prest and reuelacion. But after warde shal the children of Israel conuerte, and seke the LORDE their God, and ^dDauid their kinge: and in y^e latter dayes they shal worshipe the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ HEARE y^e worde of the LORDE, o ye children of Israel: For the LORDE must punysh thē, y^e dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulness, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but swearing, lyēge, māslaughter, theft and adoutry haue gotten the ouerhande, ⁊ one bloudgiltynesse foloweth another. Therefore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therin, shal mourne. The beastes in the felde, the foules in y^e ayre, and the fishes in the see shall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chastē nor reprove another. The prestes which shulde reforme other mē, are become like the people.

¶ Therefore stomblest thou in y^e daye tyme, ⁊ the prophet with the in the night. I wil bringe thy mother to sylence, ⁊ why? ^emy people perish, because they haue no knowlege. Seinge then that thou hast refused vnderstandinge, therefore wil I refuse y^e also: so that thou shalt nomore be my prest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childrē. The more they increased in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therefore wil I chaunge their honour in to shame. ^fThey eate vp the synnes of my people, ⁊ corage them in their wickednesse. ^gThus the prest is become like the people. ^hWherefore I will punysh them for their wicked wayes, ⁊ rewarde them accordinge to their owne ymaginacions. They shal eate, ⁊ not haue ynough: They haue vsed whordome, therefore shall they not prosper: ⁊ why? they haue forsaken the LORDE, ⁊ not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronckennesse take the herte awaye. ⁱMy people axe counel at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. For an whorish mynde hath disceaueed them, so y^e they cōmitte fornicacion agaynst their God. ^jThey make sacrifice vpon the hie mountaynes, ⁊ burne their incense vpon the hilles, yee amonge the okes, groues ⁊ buszshes, for there are good shadowes. Therefore youre daughters are become harlottes, and youre spouses haue brokē their wedlocke I wil not punish youre daughters for beinge defyled, ⁊ youre brydes that became whores: ^kseinge the fathers them selues haue medled with harlottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstonde, must be punyshed.

Though thou Israel art disposed to playe y^e harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Iuda: ^lthou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vp to Bethauē, ner haue sworne: the LORDE lyueth. For Israel is gone backe, like a wāton cowe. The LORDE therefore shal make hir fede, as y^e lābe y^e goeth astraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dronckēnesse hath put thē backe, ⁊ brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue rewarde, brynge (saye they,) to their owne shame. A wynde shall take holde of their fethers, ⁊ they shal be cōfounded in their offeringes.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punyshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor: They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therwith: ^atherfore wil I punysh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Israel is not hyd fro me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so ^y they can not knowe the LORDE.

^b But the pryde of Israel wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Israel and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Iuda with them also. ^c They shall come with their shepe & bullockes to seke ^y LORDE, ^d but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shall deuoure them with their porcions.

Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethauen vpon the yonside of Ben Iamin. In the tyme of ^y plage shal Ephraim be layed waist, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Israel. ^e Yet are the prynces of Iuda become like them, that remoue the londemarckes, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe ^f doctrynes of men. Therfore will I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Iuda as a caterpillar.

^g When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Iuda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Assur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet coude not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a Lyons whelp to the house of Iuda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faynt, and seke me.

The vi. Chapter

IN their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: ^h for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: He hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal rase vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE. He shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, ⁱ and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mornynge rayne vpon the earth.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Iuda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre loue is like a mornynge cloude, & like a dew ^j goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punyshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offeringe: ^k Yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. ^l But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenant, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murderers & bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. ^m Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Iuda shall haue an haruest for himself, when I returne the captiuyte of my people.

The vij. Chapter.

WHEN I vndertake to make Israel ⁿ whole, then the vngraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robberyng. They cōsidre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute with their owne ynuenciōs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduouty, as it were an ouen ^o the baker heateth, whē he hath lefte kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceawe thē. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouē, their slepe is all ^p night like the

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are falle: yet is there none of the γ calleth vpon me. Therefore must Ephraim be mixte amonge γ Heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, γ no man turneth: straungers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he waxeth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: γ γ pride of Israel is cast downe before their face, yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

ϵ Ephraim is like a doue, that is begyled, and hath no herte. δ Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shal sprede my net ouer them, γ drawe them downe as γ foules of the ayre: and accordinge as they haue bene warned, so will I punyssh them. ϵ Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsakē me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. δ I am he that haue redeemed them, and yet they dyssemble with me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye youlinge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate γ drinke, and me will they not obeye. I haue taught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschefe agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, γ are become as a broken bowe. Their prynces shal slayne with the swearde, for the malice of their tungen, soch blasphemies haue they lerned in the londe of Egipste

ϵ SET the horne to thy mouth, and blowe: γ get the swiftly (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my couenaunt, and transgressed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath refused the thinge that is good, therefore shall the enemye folowe vpon him. γ They haue ordered kinges, but not throw me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. δ Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruccion.

δ Thy calfe (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye, for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be censed? For the calfe came from Israel, the worke man made it, therefore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal γ calfe of Samaria be turned. They haue sowne wynde, therefore shal they reepe a storme.

Their sede shal beare no corne, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though γ re be, yet shall straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shall perish, the Gentiles shall entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wyld asse in the deserte.

δ Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therefore are they scatred amōge the Heithē, there wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges γ prynces. Ephraim hath made many alturs to do wickednes, therefore shal the alturs turne to his synne. Though I shewe the my lawe neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Whereas they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therin: but wil remembre their wickednes, and punyssh their synnes. δ Israel turneth agayne in to Egipste, they haue forgotten him that made them, they buylde churches, and Iuda maketh many stronge cities: therefore wil I sende a fyre in to their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The ix. Chapter.

δ O not thou triumphe (O Israel) make ϵ no boostinge more then the Heithen, for thou hast comitted adoutry agaynst thy God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more the all corne floores. ϵ Therefore shall they nomore enioye the cornefloores and wynepresses, and their swete wyne shal fayle the. They wil not dwel in the LORDES londe, but Ephraim turneth agayne in to Egipste, γ eateth vncleane thinges amonge the Assirians. B The nettles shall ouergrowe their pleasaunt goodes, and burres shalbe in their tabernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompencing are at honde. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greate is youre wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet ^ŷ is become a snare to do hurte in euery strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. "They be gone to farre, ⁊ haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Gabaa. Therefore their wickednes shal be remēbred, and their synnes punyshed.

I fande Israel like grapes in the wildernes, ⁊ sawe their fathers as the first fyges in ^ŷ toppes of ^ŷ fyge tre. But they are gone to Baal Peor, ⁊ runne awaie fro me to ^ŷ shamefull Idoll, ⁊ are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim flieth like a byrde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, ^ŷ they shal nether begette, cōceauē ner beare children.

C And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shall come to them, when I departe from them. Ephraim (as me thinke) is planted in welthinesse, like as Tyrus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the manslayer.

O LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shalt thou geue them? geue them an vnfrutefull wombe and drye brestes. "All their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngraciousnes of their owne inuencions, I wil dryue them out of my house. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dryed vp, so ^ŷ they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloued frute of their body. ISRUEL was a goodly vyne, but he hath ^a brought forth vnprofitable frute: yee the more frute he had, the mo altuers he made: ^ŷ more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is deuyded, therefore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shall breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their altuers. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne othes: they be cōfederate together, therefore groweth their punyshment, as the wedes in the forowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calfe of Bethauē: therefore shall the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welthynesse reioysed with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Iareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions, Samaria with his kinge shall vanish awaye, as the scombe vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their altuers. Then shal they saye to ^ŷ mountaynes: couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gabaa dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: ^e shulde not the batel then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, whē I punysh them for their greate wickednesse.  Like as the morninge goeth awaye, ſo ſhal the kinge of Iſrael paſſe.

The xi. Chapter.

¶ WHEN Iſrael was yōge, I loued him:
^a and called my ſonne out of the londe of Egipte. But ¶ more they were called, the more they wente backe: offeringe vnto Idols, and cenſynge ymagēs. ^c I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendſhippe, ¶ with bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. ^d I gaue them their fodder my ſelf, ¶ they ſhulde not go agayne in to Egipte: And now is Aſſur their kinge: For they wolde not turne vnto me. Therefore ſhal ¶ ſwearde begynne in their cities, the ſtoare that they haue lickened vnto, ſhall be deſtroyed and eaten vp: and that becauſe of their owne ymaginacions. My people hath no luſt to turne vnto me, ^e their prophetes laye the yocke vpon thē, but they eaſe them not of their burthen.

What greate thinges haue I geuen the, o
 Ephraim? how faithfully haue I defended the, o Iſrael? haue I dealt with the as with Adama? ^f or haue I intreated the like Se-boim? No, my hert is otherwiſe mynded.
 Yee my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to deſtroye Ephraim in my wrothful diſpleaſure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddeſt of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they maye folowe him: ^g Yee as a lyon roareth he,
 that they maye be aſrayed, like the children of the ſee: that they maye be ſcarrd awaye from Egipte, as men ſcare byrdes: ¶ frayd awaye (as doues uſe to be) from the Aſſiriās

londe: and that becauſe I wolde haue them tary at home, ſaieth the LORDE. But Ephraim goeth aboute me with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael dyſembleth. Only Iuda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

¶ EPHRAIM kepeth the ayre, and foloweth A after the eaſt wynde: he is euer increaſinge lyes ¶ deſtruction. They be confederate with the Aſſirians, their oyle is caried in to Egipte. ^a The LORDE hath a courte to holde with Iuda, and wil punyſh Iacob: After their owne waies and aordinge to their owne inuencions, ſhal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the hele, ^b when he was yet in his mothers wombe: and in his ſtrength he wreſtled with God. He ſtroue with the Angel, and gat the victory: ſo that he prayde and deſyred him. He fand him at Bethel, ¶ there he talked with vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen ¶ LORDE him ſelf remembred him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope ſtill in thy God. But the mar-chaunt hath a false weight in his honde, he hath B a pleaſure to occupie extortion. ^c Ephraim thinketh thus: Tuſh, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes ſhal not one ſawte be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, euē as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and ſet the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feaſt dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and ſhewed dyuerſe viſions, and declared my ſelf by the miniſtracion of ¶ prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue ſlayne oxen: ^d and as many heapes of ſtones as they had in their lōde forowes, ſo many altars haue they made. Iacob fled in to the londe of Siria, ^e and Iſrael ſerued for a wife, and for a wife
 he kepte ſhepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preſerued thē. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to diſpleaſure thorow his abhominacions: therfore ſhal his bloude be poured vpon him ſelf, and the LORDE his God ſhal reward him his blaſphemies.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE abhominacion of Ephraim is come also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therfore must he dye. ^a And now they synne more and more: of their syluer, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the Heithen, and yet all is nothing but the worke of the craftesman. Notwithstōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calves, offreth to men. Therfore they shalbe as the mornyng cloude, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that ſy wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of ſy chymney.

^b I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, & that thou shuldest haue no Sauoure but only me. ^c I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they waxed proude, and forgat me. ^d Therfore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in ſy waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she beer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wyld beastes shal teare them.

^e O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self, In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy kinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy cities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces? ^f well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, & his synne lieth hyd. Therfore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that traualeth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considereth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the graue, and deluyered him from death.

^g O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy styng. Yet can I se no comforth, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drynke vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

^h As for Samaria, they shalbe made waist, & why? they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perish with the swearde, their children shalbe slayne, and their women bygge with childe shalbe ryppe vp.

The xiiij. Chapter.

TURNE the now (o Israel) vnto ſy LORDE ^a thy God, ^b for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgeue vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, & then wil we offre ſy bullockes of oure lyppes vnto the. ^c Assur shalbe no more oure helper, nether wil we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure bondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O (yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loue them: so ſy my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as ſy lylie, & his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His branches shulde sprede out ^d abroad, & be as fayre as the olyue tre, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & florish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more? I wil graciously heare him, & lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene Fyrre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy frute. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstonde this: & he ſy is right enstructe, wil regarde it. For ſy wayes of the LORDE are righteous, such as be godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stamble therein.

Chap. III.

How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punished

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Ioel the sonne of Phatuel: Heare o ye elders: pōdre this wel, all ye that dwell in the lōde: yf euer there happened soch a thinge in youre dayes, or in ſ dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. ^aLoke what the caterpillar hath lefte, ſ hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper lefte, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, that hath the blastinge consumed. Wake vp ye dronckardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shall come vp in to my londe: these haue teth like the teth of Lyons, ^b& chafibones like the lyonesses. They shal make my vinyarde waist, they shal pyll of the barckes of my fygetrees, strype them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

Make thy mone as a virgin doth, ſ gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynkofferynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes & LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vtterly desolate. The huszbōde men & the wyne gardeners shal loke piteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the haruest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grapegatherers shal make greate mone, when the vynyarde & fygetrees be so vtterly waisted. Yee all the pomgranettes, palmtrees, apletrees & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confucion.

Gyrde you, & make youre mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aulter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sackcloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynkofferynge shal be taken awaye from the house of youre God. Proclame a fastyng, call the cōgregacion, ^cgather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together in to the house of the LORDE youre God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Allmightie. Shal not ſ meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the myrth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perish in the grounde, the garners shall lye waist, the floores shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroyed. ^dO what a sighinge make the catell? the bullockes are very euel likynge, because they haue no pasture: and the shepe are fameszshed awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie : for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath brent vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dried vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The ij. Chapter.

BLOWE out \hat{y} trompet in Sion, τ crie vp \circ my holy hill, \hat{y} all such as dwel in the londe, maye treble at it : for \hat{y} daie of the LORDE commeth, τ is harde at honde : a darcke daye, a gloomyng daye, a cloudy daye, yee τ a stormy daye, like as the mornynge spredeth out vp \circ the hilles : Namely, a great τ mightie people : such as haue not bene sens \hat{y} begynnyng, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumynge fyre, τ behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waist wildernesse, τ there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to loke vp \circ like bayrded horses, τ runne like horse men. They skyppe vp vpon \hat{y} hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes : as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

The folke shalbe afraied of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rüne like giauntes, τ leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Euery m \bar{a} in his goinge shal kepe his araie, τ not go out of his Path. There shal not one dryue another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, τ not be hurte : They shal come in to the cite, τ runne vpon the walles : They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, τ slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shalbe moued : \hat{a} the Sonne τ Moone shal be darckened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greate, stronge τ mightie to fulfill his commandement. This is \hat{y} greate and maruelous fearfull daye of the LORDE : And who is able to abyde it ?

Now therefore saith the LORDE : \hat{c} Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fastynge, wepyng and mournynge : rente youre hertes, τ not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, \hat{a} for he is gracious τ mercifull, longe sufferynge τ of greate compassion : τ redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne, τ forgeue : τ after his chastenyng, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat τ drynck offerynge vnto the LORDE youre God ? \hat{c} Blowe out with the tröpet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, τ gather the people together : warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children τ suclynges together. Let \hat{y} brydegrome go forth of his chäbre, τ the bryde out of her closet. Let the prestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch τ \hat{y} aulter, wepyng τ sayenge : be fauourable (o LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people : let not thine heretage be brought to soch confucion, lest the Heithen be lordes therof. Wherfore shulde they saye amonge the Heithen : \hat{c} where is now thyre God ?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, τ spare his people : yee \hat{y} LORDE shal answere, τ saye vnto his people : Beholde, I wil sende you corne, wyne τ oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them : τ I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the Heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you : τ shute him out in to a drye and waist londe, his face toward the east see, and his hynder parties toward the vttemost see. The stynke of him shall go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath deale so proudly. Feare not (o londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greate thinges. Be not ye afraied nether (o ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute : the fygetrees τ vinyardes shal geue their increase.

Be glad then (o ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightuousnes : \hat{c} τ he it is \hat{y} shal sende you downe shuwers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth : so that \hat{y} garners shal be full of corne, and the presses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeares that \hat{y} greszhopper, locuste, blassing τ caterpillar (my greate hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne : so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied : and

And my people shall neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shall nomore be brought to confucion.

After this, will I poure out my sprete vpon all flesh: ^a ¶ youre sonnes & youre daughters shal prophecy: youre olde mē shal dreame dreames & youre yonge men shal se visions: ^b Yee in those dayes I will poure out my sprete vpon seruantes and maydens. I will shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokēs in the earth beneth: bloude and fyre, and the vapoure off smoke. The Sonne shalbe turned in to darknesse, & y^c Moone in to bloude: before y^c greate & notable daye off the LORDE come.

And the tyme shal come: y^c who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued. For vpon the mount Sion & at Ierusalem, there shalbe a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promised: yee & amonge the other remnaunt, whom the LORDE shall call.

The iij. Chapter.

AFOR take hede: In those dayes & at y^c same tyme, when I turne agayne the captiuite of Iuda & Ierusalē: I shal gather all people together, & brynge thē in to the valley of Iosaphat: and there wil I reason with thē, because of my people & heretage of Israel: whō they haue scatred aboute in the nations, & parted my lōde: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge mē haue they set in the brodel house, & solde the Damsels for wyne, y^c they might haue to drike. "Thou Tirus and Sidō and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye defy me? well: yf ye will nedes defy me, I shall recōpence you, euen vpon youre heade, & y^c right shortly: for ye haue takē away my syluer & golde, my fayre & goodly Iewels, & brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Ierusalem haue ye solde vnto the Grekes, that ye might brynge thē farre frō y^c borders of their owne countrees.

Crie out these things amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let thē come vp all the lusty warryours of thē. Make you sweardes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre syckles & sythes. ^b Let y^c weake man saye: I am stronge. Mustre you, and come, all ye Heithē rōude aboute: gather you together, there shall the LORDE laye all thy giauntes to the grounde. Let the people aryse, and get them to the valley of Iosaphat: for there wil I syt, and iudge all Heithē rōude aboute.

^c Laye to youre sythes, for the haruest is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waxen greate. In the valley appoynted, there shalbe many, many people: for the daye of the LORDE is nye in y^c valley appoynted. The Sonne and Moone shall be darkened, ^d & the starres shal withdrawe their light. The LORDE shal roare out of Sion, & crie out of Ierusalē, ^e that the heauens & the earth shal quake withall. THESE are the sermons, that were shewed vnto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecua) vpon Israel, in the tyme of Osias kynge of Iuda, ^a in the tyme of Ieroboam sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel, two yeaere before the earthquake. And he sayde: ^b The LORDE shal roare out off Sion, and shewe his voyce fro Ierusalem: so that the pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, and the toppe of Charmel dried vp.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: ^c for thre and foure wickednesses of Damascus, I will not spare her: because they haue throszthed Galaad with yron flaes: But I wil sende a fyre in to the house of Hazael, the same shal consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, and rote out the inhabiter fro the felde of Auen, and him the holdeth the scepter, out of the pleasunt house: so the people shalbe dryuen out of fayre Siria, sayeth the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: ^d because they make the prisoners yet more captiue, and haue dryuen the in to the lode of Edom. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to the wallis of Gaza, which shal deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out the dwell at Asdod and him the holdeth the scepter of Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnaunt of the Philistines shal perish, saith the LORDE.

captiuyte of the Edomites, and haue not remembred the brotherly couenant. "Therefore will I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shal consume hir pallaces. Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him,^a because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Themā, which shal deuoure the pallaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'For thre ād foure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I wil not spare them: because they ryp̄te vp the womē greate with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therefore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shal consume hir palaces: with a greate crie, in the daye of batel, in tempest and in the daye off storme: so that their kyngē shal go in to captiuyte, he and his prices together, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab,^d I wil not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kyngē of Edom to ashes. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal cōsume ŷ pallaces of Carioth: so ŷ Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I will rote out the iudge from amōge them, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'for thre ād foure wickednesses of Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kep̄te his commaundementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceaue with the lyes, that their forefathers folowed. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces off Ierusalem.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre ⁊ foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the rightuous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, ⁊ croke the wayes off the meke. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery aluter vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. "Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as hie as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: notwithstandinge I destroyed his frute frō aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egipte,^e and led you xl. yeaues thorow the wyldernesse, that ye might haue the Amoriters londe in possession. I raysed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE? But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke,^f yee ye cōmaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crassehe you in sonder, like as a wayne crasseth, ŷ is full of sheaues: so that ŷ swifte shall not escape, nether the stronge be able to do eny thyngē: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off fote shall not escape. The horsmā shal not saue his life, ⁊ he that is as māly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all ŷ trybes, whō I brought out of Egipte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therefore will I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together excepte they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelpē out of his denne, 'excepte he haue gotten somthigē? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpō ŷ earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche somewhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afraied? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secrete before vnto his seruantes ŷ prophetes. LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophesy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greate murthure and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vp robbery in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shalbe troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shalbe plucked from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges or a peece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shalbe plucked awaye. Heare, and beare recorde in the house of Iacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset & altures at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the alture shalbe broken off, & fall to the ground.

As for the wynter house and sommer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiii. Chapter.

HEARE this worde, o ye fat kyne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore me wronge, and oppresse the nedy: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge hyther, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shalbe lift vp vpon speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fysshers pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngaciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. ^aYe brought youre sacrifices in the mornynge, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thakofferinge off leuen, ye promised frewillofferings, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities,

Whē there were but three monethes vnto & haruest, I withelde the rayne from you: yee I rayned vpon one cite, and not vpon another one peece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (yee three) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth & LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: & catirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amonge you, as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen with & swerde, and caused youre horses be taken captiue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrels: Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Some off you haue I ouerthrown: as I ouerthrewe Sodome & Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucked out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornynge and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpon the hye places off the earth: & LORDE God of hostes is his name.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The vyrgin Israel shall fall, & neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shal helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth & LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shalbe left scarce an C. therein: and where & dwelt an C. there shal scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto & house of Israel: Seke after me, ad ye shal lyue, but seke not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shal be caried awaye captyue, and Bethel shal come to naught. Seke the LORDE, [†] ye maye lyue: lest the house of Ioseph be brent with fyre and cōsumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

B Ye turne the lawe to wormwood, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons,^a he turneth the night in to daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth [‡] waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: [§] the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruction vpon the mightie people, [¶] bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euel will, [‡] reproueth them openly: and who so telleth the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch the as ye oppresse [‡] poore, [¶] and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye haue buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelōs pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of the shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. [¶] Enemies are ye off the rightuous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

C Seke after the thinge that is good, [¶] not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hostes shal be with you, accordinge to youre owne desyre. [¶] Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: [¶] (no doute) the LORDE God of hostes shal be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Ioseph. Yff no (sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hostes) there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye i euery strete: alas, alas. They shall call the housbonde man to lamentaciō, and soch as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vynyardes there shal be heuynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off [‡] LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shalbe darcke ad not cleare: Yee like as when a mā rūneth frō a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: or, whē he commeth in to the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. [¶] Shall not the daye off the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shal it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

D [¶] I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, ad where as ye cense me when ye come together I will not accepte it. And though ye offere me brentofferings and meatofferings, yet haue I no pleasure therein: As for youre fat thankofferynges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, [¶] gaue ye me offeringes and sacrifices those xl. yeares longe in the wyldernes? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols, [¶] Yee ad the starre of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipe them. Therefore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hostes.

The vi. Chapter.

WO be to the proude welthy in Siō, [¶] to soch as thinke the so sure vpon [‡] mount of Samaria? which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and rule the house of Israel, euē as they list. Go vnto Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better at ease then these kyngdomes, or the border of their londe wyder then yours? Ye are taken out for the euel daye, euen ye that syt in the stole of wyfulnessse: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lambes of [‡] flocke, and the fattest calues off the droaue: [¶] ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: ye that drynke wyne out of goblettes, [¶] anoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Ioseps hurte. The biij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me such a vision: beholde, there stode one that made greszhoppers, euen when the corne was shuteynge forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vndertoke to eate vp all the grene thynges in f lōde, I sayde: O LORDE God, be mercifull, I beseke the: who shulde els helpe vp Iacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was gracious therin, and the LORDE sayde: well, it shall not be. Agayne, f LORDE shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE God called the fyre to punysh withall, and it deuoured the greate depe: yee it consumed a parte allredy. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, holde thyne honde: for who shulde els helpe vp Iacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was merciful therin, and the LORDE God sayde: well, it shal not be.

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As ^c for me, "I am nether prophet, ner prophetes sonne: but a keeper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goynge after the catell, the LORDE toke me, a sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therefore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. The biij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me this ^a vision: and beholde, there was a maūde with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a maūde with sommer frute. The first Chapter.

A THIS is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath ȝ LORDE God spokē vpō Edō: "We haue herde of the LORDE ȝ there is an embassage sent amonge the Heithen: Vp, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make ȝ small amōge the Heithen, so that thou shalt be vtterly despised. ^a The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in ȝ strōge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thyne herte: who shal cast me downe to the ground? But ^b though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starres: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thēce. ^a 4 Re. 14. c. Ione 3. a. Gen. 10. b.

But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see; and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were afrayde, and cried euery man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast in to the see, to lighten it off them. But Ionas gat him vnder ^yhatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

So the master of the shippe came to him ^band sayde vnto him: why slomberest thou? Vp, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled.^a And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Ionas.

Thē sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for whose cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nacion? He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were [¶] men exceedingly afraied, & sayde vnto him: why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde morouer vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye cease from troubling vs? (for the see wrought and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wote, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Neuerthesse, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wolde not be, because the see wrought so, & was so troublous agaynst them. Wherefore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: ^b O LORDE, let vs not perish for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (o LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

So they toke Ionas, and cast him in to the see, and the see lefte ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doyng sacrifice ad makynge vowes vnto the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

^a BUT the LORDE prepared a greate fyshe, to swallow vp Ionas. ^c So was Ionas in the bely of the fysh, thre dayes and thre nights. And Ionas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayed: ^d In my trouble I called vnto [¶] LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce. Thou haddest cast me downe depe in [¶] middest off the see, and the floude compased me aboute: ^e yee all thy wawes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thought that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil yet agayne loke towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compased me, euen to the very soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wedes were wrapte aboute myne heade. I wente downe to the botome of the hilles, & was barred in with earth for euer. But thou (o LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe agayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thought vpon the LORDE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of vayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgeuyng, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion commeth of the LORDE. And [¶] LORDE spake vnto [¶] fysh, and it cast out Ionas agayne vpon the drie londe.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN came the worde of the LORDE ^a vnto Ionas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite, ^b & preach vnto them the preachinge, which I bade the. So Ionas arose, and wente to Ninieue at the LORDES commaundement. Ninieue was a greate cite vnto God, namely, off thre dayes iourney.

And Ionas wente to, and entred in to [¶] cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ninieue be ouerthrowen. ^c And the people of Ninieue beleued God, and proclaimed fastinge, and arayed them selues in sack cloth, as well the greates as the small of them. And the tydinges came vnto [¶] kinge of Ninieue, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his apparell off, and put on sack cloth, and sate him downe in ashes.

And it was cried and commaunded in ^b Ninieue, by the auctorite of the kige and his lordes, sayenge: ^d se that nether man or beest, oxe or shepe taist ought at all: and that they nether fede ner drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and beest, and crye mightely vnto God: yee se that euery man turne fro his euell waye, ^e and from the wickednesse, [¶] he hath in honde.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repête, and cease from his feare wrath, that we perish not. And when God sawe their workes, how they turned from their wicked wayes: ^f he repented on the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The iiii. Chapter.

¶ WHERFORE Ionas was sore discontent, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre? therfore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lōge sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shuldest take punyshment. ° And now o LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? and Ionas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde therof: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wylde vyne, which sprange vp ouer Ionas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to deliuer him out of his payne. And Ionas was exceadinge glad of the wylde vyne. But vpō the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordered a worme, which smote the wylde vyne, so that it withered awaye. And when the Sōne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Ionas, that he faynted agayne, and wyszshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better for me to dye, thē to lyue. And God sayd vnto Ionas: Art thou so angrie for the wylde vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde: thou hast compassion vpon a wylde vyne, wherō thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Niniue that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, y knowe not their right hōde frō the left, besydes moch catell?

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Micheas ^athe Morastite, in the dayes of Ioathan, Ahas and Ezechias kiges of Iuda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Ierusalem.

^bHeare all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therein is: Yee the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen ^cthe LORDE from his holy temple. For why? beholde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, ^dand come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The mountaynes shall consume vnder him, ^eand the valleyes shal cleue asunder: like as wax cōsumeth at the fyre, ^fand as ^gthe waters runne downward. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Iacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel

^hBut what is the wickednesse of Iacob? Is not Samaria? ⁱWhich are the hye places of Iuda? Is not Ierusalē? Therefore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley, ^jand discouer hir foudaciōs. All hir ymages shalbe brokē downe ^kand all hir wyunynges shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore, ^land in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherefore I wil mourne ^mand make lamentacion, bare ⁿand naked will I go: I must mourne like ^othe dragons, ^pand take sorow as ^qthe Estriches: for their woide is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Iuda, ^rand hath touched ^sthe porte of my people at Ierusalē allredy. Wepe not, ^tlest they at Geth perceaue it.

^uThou at Betaphra, welter thy self in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get the hence with shame. The proude shal boost nomore for very sorowe: ^vand why? hir neighbour shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shal not be so euell: but for all that, the plage shal come from the LORDE, euen in to the porte of Ierusalem. ^wThe greate noyse off the charettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of ^xthe synne of ^ythe daughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Yee she sent hir coursers in to the londe of Geth.

The houses of lies will disceau the kynges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shal brynge a possessor vpon the, ^zand the plage of Israel shal reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and shaue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shalbe caried awaye captiue from the.

The ij. Chapter.

WO vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuyse vngraciosnesse vpon their beddes, to perfourme it in ^athe cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, ^bthey robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house, ^cand euery man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: ^dBeholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuyed a plage, wherout ye shal not plucke youre neckes: Ye shal nomore go so proudly, for it will be a perlous tyme. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournynge shal be made ouer you on this maner: We be vtterly desolate, the porcion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath taken from vs?

Neuerthelesse there shalbe no man to deuyde the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. ^eTush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shall not fall vpon this people, we shall not come so to confucion, sayeth the house off Iacob. Is the sprete off the LORDE so clene awaye? or is he so mynded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therefore must I take parte agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out frō their good houses, and taken awaye my excellent giftes from their children. Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are corrupte, and shall miserably perish. Yf I were a fleshly felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbinge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I wil gather the in dede (o Iacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all together. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the catell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go before them, and the LORDE shalbe vpon the heade of them.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE, o ye heades of the house of Iacob, and ye leders of the house of Israel: 'Shulde not ye knowe, what were lauffull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens skynnes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, and flay of their skynne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peeces as it were in to a cauldron, and as flesh in to a pot. 'Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: because that thorow their owne ymaginaciōs, they haue dealte so wickedly.

And as concerninge the prophetes that disceame my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: 'When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shalbe well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

'Therefore youre vision shalbe turned to night, and youre prophecyenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those prophetes, and the daye shalbe darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, and y saythsayers confounded: yee they shalbe fayne (all the packe of thē) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods worde. 'As for me, I am full of strength, and of y sprete of y LORDE, full of iudgment and boldnesse: to shewe the house of Iacob their wickednesse, and the house of Israel their synne.

O heare this ye rulers of the house of Iacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lauffull, and wraiste asyde the thinge that is straight: 'Ye that buylde vp Sion with bloude, and Ierusalem with doyng wronge. O ye iudges, ye geue sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophecy for money. Yet wil they be takē as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORDE amonge vs? 'Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therefore shal Sion (for youre sakes) be plowed like a felde: Ierusalē shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of y temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT in the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that 'the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer thē eny mōutaynes or hilles: Yee the people shall preesse vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haist them thither, sayēge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of the God of Iacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

'For the lawe shall come out off Sion, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the Heithen, and reforme the people off farre cōtrees: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and sythes off their speares.

One people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, 'yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shal syt vnder his vinyarde and vnder his fyge tre, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off y LORDE of hoostes hath spoken it. Therefore, where as all people haue walked euery man in y name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for euer and euer. 'At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and soch as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of y outcastes a greate people: 'and the LORDE himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Sion, frō this tyme forth for euermore. 'And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the daughter Sion) vnto the shal it come: euē the first lordshipec and kyngdome of the daughter Ierusalē. Why thē art thou now so heuy? is there no kynge in the? are thy councelers awaye, that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

And now (o thou daughter Sion) be sory, let it greue the as a wife laboring with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne felde: Yee vnto Babilō shalt thou go, there shalt thou be

Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughts off the LORDE, ^bthey vnderstonde not his counsell, that shall gather them together as the sheeues in the barne. Therefore get the vp (o thou daughter Sion) and throsshe out the corne: For I wil make thy horne yron, and thy clawes brasse, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropriate vnto the LORDE, and their substance vnto the ruler off the whole worlde.

The v. Chapter.

AFTER that shalt thou be robbed thy self, o thou robbers daughter: they shal laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, ^cart litle amonge the thousands off Iuda. Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shall be ^fy governoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnyng, and from euerlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne: then shall the remnaunt off his brethren be conuerted vnto ^fy children off Israel. He shal stonde fast, and geue fode in the strength of the LORDE, ^dand in the victory of the name of ^fy LORDE his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

B Then shal there be peace, so that the Assirian maye come in to oure londe, and treade in oure houses. We shal brynge vp seuen shepherdes and viij. prynces vpo them: these shal subdue the londe off Assur with their naked wepens. ^eThus shal he delyuer vs from the Assiria, when he commeth within oure lande, and setteth his fote within oure borders. And the remnaunt off Iacob shal be amonge the multitude of people, as the dew off the LORDE, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth off no body. ^fYee the residue off Iacob shalbe amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes off ^fy wodde, and as the lyons whelpe amonge a flocke of shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne honde shalbe lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

The tyme shal come also (sayeth the LORDE) that I wil take thine horses from the, ^gand destroye thy charettes. I wil breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. ^hAll witchcraftes will I rote out off thyne hande, there shall no mo soythsayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thyne ymages will I destroye out off ⁱy so that thou shalt nomore bowe thy self vnto the workes of thyne owne hondes. ^jThy groues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, ^kand breake downe thy cities. Thus will I be auenged also, vpon all Heithen that will not heare.

The bi. Chapter.

HERKEN now what the LORDE sayeth: ^lVp, reprove the mountaynes, ^mand let the hilles heare thy voyce. O Heare the punyishment of the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundacis off ⁿy earth: for the LORDE wil reprove his people, ^oand reason with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherin haue I hurte the? ^pgeue me answer. ^qBecause I brought the fro the londe off Egipte, and delyuered the out off the house off bondage? Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lode the? ^rRemember (o my people) what Balach the kyng of Moab had ymaged agaynst the, ^sand what answer that Balaam the sonne off Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: ^ty ye maye knowe the lounge kyndnesses off ^fy LORDE.

B What acceptable thyng shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe my kne to the hye God? Shal I come before him with brent offeringes, and with calues of a yeare olde? Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames off oyle? Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne offences, and the frute of my body for the synne of my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyret off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in lounge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: ^uthat thou mayest be called a cite of the LORDE, ^vand that thy name maye be rightuousnesse. Or shulde I iustifie the false balances and the bagge of disceatfull weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightuously gotten: where the citesyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceatfull tungen in their mouthes?

C Therefore I wil take in honde to punysh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: yee thou shalt bringe thy self downe. ^aThou shalt fle, but not escape: ad those y thou woldest saue, wil I deluyuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: "thou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, to anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke no wyne. ^aYe kepe the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the customes of the house of Achab: ye folowe their pleasures, therefore wil I make the waist, & cause thy inhabitors to be abhorred, O my people: & thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The vii. Chapter.

WO is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleenyng in the haruest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I fayne (with all my herte) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpō earth, there is not one rightuous amōge mē. They laboure all to shed bloude, & euery mā hunteth his brother to death: yet they saye they do well, when they do euell. As the prince wil, so sayeth the iudge: y he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greate mā speaketh what his herte desyareth, & y hearers alowe him. The best off thē is but as a thistle, and the most rightuous of them is but as a brere in the hedge. But when the daye of thy preachers commeth, y thou shalt be vysited: thē shal they be waisted awaye. ^aLet no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidēce in a prince. Kepe the porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: ^afor y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the daughter shal ryse agaynst her mother, y daughter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shalbe euen they of his owne housholde.

Neuerthesse I wil loke vp vnto y LORDE, B I wil patiently abyde God my sauoure: my God shal heare me. O thou enemie of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp agayne: ^aand though I syt in darcknesse, yet y LORDE is my light. I wil beare the punishment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he syt in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bringe me forth to the light, and I shal se his rightuousnesse.

She that is myne enemy shal loke vpon it, & be confounded, which now saith: ^aWhere is thy LORDE God? Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shalbe troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. ^aThe tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal goe abrode: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the strōge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Notwithstandinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charmel, Basan & Galaad as afore tyme. Maruelous thinges will I shewe them, ^alike as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the Heithen se, and be aszshamed for all their power: ^aso that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. ^aThey shal licke the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, y tremble in their holes. They shalbe afayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare y.

Where is there such a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgeuest the offences of the remnaunt of thine heretage? He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: ^ahe shal turne agayne, & be mercyfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednesses, & cast all oure synnes in to the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Iacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe agoo.

Chap. III.

He reproueth the abhominacions of the malicious cite, and sheweth them of their punyshment.

THIS is the heuy burthen of Niniue, which Naum of Elchos dyd wryte, as he sawe it

The first Chapter.

THE LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeance: yee a taker of vengeance is [¶] LORDE, and wrothfull. ^aThe LORDE taketh vengeance of his enemies, and reserueth displeasure for his aduersaries.
^bThe LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whē he reproueth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charnel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therein. ^cWho maye endure before his wrath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Ful gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth thē that put their trust in him: when the floude ren-neth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies.
What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come nomore trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dronckardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of [¶] soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngracious coun-cell agaynst the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Let thē be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vex the, but not vtterly destroye the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement cōcernynge the, that there shall come nomore sede of thy name. ^dThe carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

BEHOEDE, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, "that bryngeth good tydings, & preacheth peace. O Iuda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourne thy promyses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is vtterly roted out.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Iacob, like as y^e glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shyld of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forwarde, his archers are wel deckte & trimmed. The charettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cresettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenyng.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their araye, & haistely they clymme vp the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shall fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captiue, and hir gentilwomen shal mourne as the doves, & grone within their hertes. ^a Ninieue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stōde, (shal they crie) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shalbe a multitude of all maner costly ornantes. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees trēble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyōs, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyonesse wente with the whelpes, and no man frayed them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyonesse: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauyszhed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shal nomore be herde.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, ^a & wil not leaue of from rauyszhinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, ruszhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarces, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a mastresse of wychcraft, yee and selleth the people thorow hir whordome, and the nacions thorow hir wichcraft.

^a Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the Heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyrte vpon y^e, to make the be abhorred, and a gasyng stocke: Yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Niniue is destroyed.

Who wil haue pyte vpō the? where shal I seke one to conforte the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexādrīa? that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egipte were hir strēgh, & that exceedinge greate aboue measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuyte: hir yonge children were smytten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be droncken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees with rype fyges: which whē a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure thy barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy strōge holdes, go in to the claye, tempre the morter, make

What Abacuc conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Chap. II.

Chap. III.

A prayer of the prophet.

The first Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. ^aO LORDE, how longe shal I crie, & thou wilt not heare? ^bHow longe shall I complayne vnto the, suf-frynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyrāny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is torne in peces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the righteous: this is the cause, [¶]y wronge iudgment procedeth. Beholde amonge the Heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abaszshed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

For lo, ^aI wil rase vp [¶] Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boysteous people is it, these shal syt in iudgment & punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cates of the mountayne, & byte sorer then [¶]y wolues in [¶]y euenynge. Their hors-men come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastily to deuoure as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them commeth an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shall mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corage vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, [¶] & so ascrybe that power vnto their God.

C But thou o LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnyng, therefore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punyshmet, and set them to re-proue the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde [¶] thinge that is wicked. [¶] Wherefore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the creping beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therefore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pléteous. Wherefore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer cease to slaye the people.

The ij. Chapter.

A I STODE vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answer I shulde geue him [¶] & reprocue me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so commeth by, maye rede it: for [¶] visio is yet farre of for a tyme, [¶] but at [¶] last it shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, [¶] for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prospere: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. [¶] Like as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnsatiace as death. [¶] All Heithen gathereth he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

B But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, [¶] & shal byte the, & awake, that shal teare [¶] in peces? yee thou shalt be their pray. [¶] Seinge thou hast spoyled many Heithen, therefore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

[¶] Wo vnto him, that couetously gathereth euell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the power of mysfortune. [¶] Thou hast deuyed [¶] shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully offended: [¶] so that the very stones of the wall shal crie out of it, and the tymbre that lieth betwixte the ioyntes of the buyldinge shall answer. [¶] Wo vnto him, [¶] & buyldeth the towne with bloude, and maynteneth [¶] cite with vnrightuousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hoostes bringe this to passe, that the laboures of the people shal be brent with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weered them selues, shall be lost? [¶] For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honoure, like as the waters that couer the see.

Wo vnto him that geueth his neighbour dryncke, to get him wrothfull displeasure for his dronckennesse: [¶] that he maye se his preytees. Therefore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Dryncke thou also, till thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hōde shall compasse the aboute, and shamefull spewing in steade of thy worshipec. For the wrōge that thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, [¶] and the wilde beastes shal make the afraied: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all soch as dwel therein.

C What helpe than wil [¶] ymage do, whom the workman hath fashioned? Or the vayne cast ymage, wherin because the craftesman putteth his trust, therefore maketh he domme Idols? Wo vnto him, that saith to a pece of wod: arise, and to a domme stone: stonde vp. For what instructio maye soch one geue? Beholde, it is layed ouer with golde and syluer, ⁊ there is no breth in it. * But the LORDE in his holy tēple is he, whom all the worlde shulde feare.

The iij. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of ⁊, I was afayed. The worke ⁊ thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme cometh, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God cometh from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as ⁊ sonne, ⁊ beames of light go out of his hondes, there is his power hid. Destrucō goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondesth, ⁊ measureth the earth: He loketh, ⁊ the people consume awaye, the mōutaynes of ⁊ worlde fall downe to powlder, and the hilles are fayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the paulions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (o LORDE) in the waters? was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, whē thou sattest vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory: Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou ^b haddest promised with an ooth vnto the trybes. Sela.

B Thou didest deuyde the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afayed, ⁊ water streame wēte awaye: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vp of thine honde. * The Sonne and Mone remainyd still in their habitation. Thine arrowes wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. ^a Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest throsshe the Heithen in thy displeasure. Thou camest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe thine anynted. Thou smotest downe the heade in the house of the vngodly, ⁊ discoueredest his foundacions, euē vnto ⁊ necke of him. Sela.

Thou cursest his septers, the captayne of his men of warre: which come as a stormy wynde to scatre me abroad, ⁊ are glad when they maye eat vp ⁊ poore secretly. Thou makest a waye for thine horses in the see, euen in the mudde of greate waters. Whē I heare this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at ⁊ voyce therof, my bones corruppe, I am afayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vp vnto oure people, which are already prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, ⁊ the vynes shal beare no frute. The labour of ⁊ olyue shalbe but lost, and the londe shall bringe no corne: the shepe shalbe taken out of ⁊ folde, and there shalbe no catell in ⁊ stalles. But as for me, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sauoure. * The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: ⁊ he which geueth ⁊ victory, shal bringe me to my hye places, synginge vpon my psalmes.

Punyishment because of the wickednesse of the Iewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the Heithen.

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedolias, the sonne of Amarias & sonne of Hezechias: in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. "I will gather vp all thinges in the londe (saith the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beest: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see (to the greate decaye of the wicked) & wil vtterly destroye the men out of the londe, saith the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Iuda, and vpon all soch as dwel at Ierusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnaunt of Baal from this place, and the names of the Kemuryns and prestes: yee & soch as vpon their house toppes worshipe & bowe them selues vnto the hoost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE,^a and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from & LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, ner regarde him.

^b Be still at & presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offeringe, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES a slaynofferinge: "I will vyset the prynces, the kinges children, & all soch as weere straunge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all those, that treade ouer the thresholde so proudly, which fyll their lordes house with robbery and falsede. At & same tyme (saith the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crie from the fyshporte, and an howlinge from & other porte, and a greate murthur from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are rote out.

"At the same tyme wil I seke thorow Ierusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that contynue in their dregges, and saye in their hertes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good ner euell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. They shall buylde houses, and not dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne therof. ^cFor the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, & cometh on a pace. Horrible is & tydinges of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye

Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, & their bodies as the myre. ^a Nether their syluer ner their golde shalbe able to deluyer thē in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE, ^b but the whole londe shalbe consumed thorow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make clene ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

The ij. Chapter.

A COME together and gather you, O ye frauwerde people: or y^e thinge go forth that is concluded, & or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES sore displeasure come vpon you. ^c Seke the LORDE all yee meke harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his iudgmēt: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y^e LORDE. ^d For Gaza shal be destroyed, & Ascalon shall be layed waist: They shal cast out Aszdod at the noone daye, and Accaron shal be pluckte vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y^e dwel vpon the see coast, ye murthurous people: the worde of y^e LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the Philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that there shal no man dwel in the eny more: & as for the see coast, it shal be hyrdmens cotages & shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for soch as remayne of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y^e houses of Ascalon shal they rest towarde night: for the LORDE their God shal vyset thē, & turne awaye their captyuite. B I haue herde the despite of Moab, & the ^eblasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully intreated my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therefore as truly as I lyue (saieith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel) Moab shalbe as Sodome, & Ammon as Gomorra: euen drie thorne hedges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them, the remnaunt of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, ^f because they haue dealede so shamefully with the LORDE of hostes people, and magnified them selues aboute them. The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them, and ^g destroye all the goddes in the londe. And all the Iles of the Heithen shal worshipe him, euery man in his place.

Ye Moriās also shal perish with my swerde: C Yee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Ninieue, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist. The flockes and all the beastes of the people shal lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper postes of it, foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal syt vpon the balckes, for the bordes of Cedre shalbe ryuē downe. ^h This is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y^e the beestes lye therin? Who so goeth by, mocketh her, and poynteth at her with his fynger.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to the abhominable, fylthie and A cruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, nether wil she holde her to hir God. ⁱ Hir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir iudges are as wolues in the euenynge, which leaue nothinge behynde them till the morow. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore ye shal waite vpon me (saieth the LORDE) vntil the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am determed, to gather the people and to bringe the kingdomes together, that I maye poure out myne anger, yee all my wrathfull displeasure vpon them. ^aFor all the worlde shalbe consumed with the fyre of my gelousy. And then wil I clense the lippes of the people, that they maye euerychone call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with one shulder. Soch as I haue subdued, and my children also whom I haue scatred abrode, shal brynge me presentes beyonde the waters of Ethiopia.

The remnaunt of Israel shal do no wickednes, ner speake lyes: nether shal there eny disceatful tunge be founde in their mouthes. For they shal be fed, and take their rest, and no man shal make them afrayed. Geue thankes o doughter Siō, be ioyful o Israel: reioyce & be glad from thy whole herte, o doughter Ierusalem, for the LORDE hath taken awaye thy punyshment, and turned backe thine enemies. The kinge of Israel, euen the LORDE himself is with the: so that thou nedest nomore to feare eny mysfortune.

In that tyme it shall be sayed to Ierusalem: feare not, and to Sion: let not thine hondes be slacke, for the LORDE thy God is with the, it is he that hath power to saue: he hath a special pleasure in the, and a maruelous loue towarde the: yee he reioyseth ouer the with gladnesse. Soch as haue bene in heuynesse, wil I gather together, and take out of thy congregacion: as for the shame and reprofe that hath bene layed vpon the, it shal be farre from the. And lo, in ^cthat tyme wil I destroye all those that vex the: ^dI wil helpe the lame, and gather vp the cast awaye: yee I wil get them honoure and prayse in all lōdes, where they haue bene put to shame. At ^ethat same tyme wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you. I wil get you a name and a good reporte, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe youre captiuyte before youre eyes, saieth the LORDE.

Chap. II.

He geueth the rulers a corage. Of the ornamētes and glory of the seconde temple, wherby is vnderstōde the church of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

IN the seconde yeaere of kynge Darius, ^ain the vj. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) ^bvnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel ^cþ prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hoostes, and saieth: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buylde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus ^dand sayed: ^eYe youre selues can fynde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Considre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saieth ^fthe LORDE of hoostes) ye sowe moch, but ye bringe litle in: ^gYe eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre selues, but ye are not warme: ^hye ⁱearneth eny wage, putteth it in a broken purse.

33 Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Cōsidre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vp to the mountayne, fetch wod, ^kand buylde vp the house: ^lthat it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honoure, saieth the LORDE. Ye loked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: ^mand though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why so, saieth the LORDE of hoostes? Euē because that my house lyeth so waist, ⁿand ye renne euery man vnto his owne house. Wherefore the heauen is forbyddē to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrease. ^oI haue called for a drouth, both vpō the londe ^pand vpon the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne ^qand vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handy laboure.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, ^rand Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest with the remnaunt of the people, herde the voyce of the LORDE their God, ^sand the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE. Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: ^tI am with you, saieth the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the sprete of Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and the sprete of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and the sprete of the remnaunt of all the people: ^uthey came ^vand laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

A VPON the xxiiij. daye of the sixte moneth, in the secōde yere of kinge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seuenth moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and to the residue of \hat{y} people, τ saye: "Who is left amōge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, euē as though it were nothinge? Neuerthelesse be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE) ^abe of good comforte, o Iesua thou sonne of Iosedec, hye prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saith the LORDE of hoostes, and do acordinge to the worde (for I am with you, ^csaith the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: τ my sprete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

B For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: "Yet once more will I shake heauē and earth, the see and the drye lōde: Yee I will moue all Heithen, τ the comforte of all Heithen shall come, τ so wil I fyll this house with honoure, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, ^e τ the golde is myne, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Thus \hat{y} glory of the last house shalbe greater thē the first, saith the LORDE of hoostes: τ in this place wil I geue peace, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The xxiiij. daye of the ix moneth in the seconde yere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God of hoostes: Axe the prestes concernynge the lawe, τ saye: "Yf one beare holy flesh in his cote lappe, τ with his lappe do touch the bred, potage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, τ saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beyng defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of these: shall it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answeere τ sayed: yee, it shall be vnclene. ^fThē Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people τ this nacion before me, saith \hat{y} LORDE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpō another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bushels, there were scarce ten: ^gand that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. pottes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blasinge τ hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of the ix. moneth, vnto the daye that the foundation of the LORDES temple was layed: "Marck it well, Is not the sede yet in the barne? haue not the vyues, the fyge trees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull? but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

Morouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee τ destroye the mightie kingdome of the Heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, euery man thorow his neighbours swerde. And as for the, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE of hoostes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruauent: I wil take the (saith the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a seale: for I haue chosen the, saith the LORDE of hoostes

IN the eight moneth of the secōde yeare of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto ^aZachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, say-enge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes. ^bTurne you vnto me (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saieth the LORDE of hoostes. ^cBe not he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge boke of xx. cubites longe & x. cubites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theues shalbe iudged after this boke, & all swearers shalbe iudged according to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) so y it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsely sweareth by my name: & shal remayne in his house, & cōsume it, with the tymbre & stones therof. Thē the angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes te se, what this is y goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they (y dwell vpon the whole earth) to lōke vpon. And beholde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & threwe y lompe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a Storke) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, y talked with me: whyther wil these beare the measure? And he sayde vnto me: in to the londe of Synear, to buylde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shall be set there in his place.

The vi. Chapter.

MOROUER I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came iiij. charettes out frō betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: In the first charet were reade horse, In the secōde charet were blacke horse, In y thirde charet were whyte horse, In y fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lorde, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: These are the iiij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stōde before the ruler of all y earth. That with the blacke horse wente in to the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed thē, and the sprekled horses wente forth towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow out the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde y north, shal still my wrath in the north cōtre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Take of the prisoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Heldai, Tobias and Idaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Iosias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heade of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, the hie prest, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, the man whose name is the braunch: te he that shal springe vp after him, shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE. He shal beare the prayse, he shal syt vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

A prest shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shalbe betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembrance vnto Helem, Tobias, Idaia and Hen the sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre of, shal come and buylde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE your God.

The viij. Chapter.

IT happened also in the fourth yeare of *ky*ng Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Casleu: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: Shulde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoostes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned "in the v & vij. moneth (now this lxx. yeares) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Ierusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt mē, both towarde the south and in the playne countrees?

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louynge kyndnesse, \hat{e} euery man to his brother: Do the wyddowe, the fatherlesse, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ymagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. \hat{c} Neuertheles they wolde not take hede, but turned their backs, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare, yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe & wordes, \hat{d} which the LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy sprete by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherefore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, \hat{e} that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but scatered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, \hat{y} there traueled no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasaunt londe was vtterly layed waist.

The viij. Chapter.

A SO the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myddest of Ierusalem: \hat{f} so that Ierusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes:

There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and soch as go with stauies in their hondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playnge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: \hat{y} the residue of this people thynke it to be vnpossible in these dayes, shulde it therefore be vnpossible in my sight, \hat{e} sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil deluyuer my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil brynge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Ierusalem. \hat{h} They shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in treuth and rightuousnesse. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let youre hondes be stronge, ye that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buylded. \hat{i} For why? before these dayes nether men ner catel coude wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neyghboure.

Neuerthelesse I wil now intreate the residue of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shalbe a sede of peace. \hat{k} The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the gronde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the Heithen (O ye house of Iuda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deluyuer you, that ye shalbe a blessinge: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuyed to punysh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Iuda and Ierusalem, therefore feare ye not. your portes, none of you ymagyn euell in his hert agaynst his neyghboure, and loue no false oother: for all these are the thinges that I hate, sayeth the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus sayeth the LORDE of hostes: The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seuenth, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, ⁊ prosperous hye feastes vnto the house of Iuda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: "Vp, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, let vs seke the LORDE of hostes, I wil go with you. Yee moch people and mightie Heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hostes at Ierusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Iewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The ii. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE shalbe receaued at Adrach, ⁊ Damascus shal be his offerynge: for the eyes of all mē and of the trybnes of Israel shal loke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hemath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also ⁊ Sidon, for they are very wise. ^bTyrus shal make himself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sonde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see,^c and she shalbe consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afrayed. Gaza shalbe very sory, so shal Accaron also, ^dbecause hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shal perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straungers shall dwel at Aszdod, ⁊ as for ^efy pryde of ^fPhilistynes, I shal rote it out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, ^gand their abhominaciōs from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for oure God, yee they shalbe as a prynce in Iuda, ⁊

Accaron like as Iebusi. And so will I compase my house rounde aboute with my men of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppresseure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion: be glad, o daughter Ierusalem. ^hFor lo, thy kinge commeth vnto the, euen the righteous and Sauoure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpō the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes frō Ephraim, ⁊ the horse from Ierusalem, the batel bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctryne of peace vnto the Heithen, ⁱand his dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, ⁊ from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the bloude of thy couenaunt: ^kshalt let thy presoners out of the pytte, wherin is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, ^lye that be in preson, ⁊ longe sore to be deluyered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the dubble agayne. For Iuda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Siō) wil I rayse vp agaynst the Grekes, and make the as a giauntes swearde: the LORDE God shalbe sene aboute thē, and his dartes shal go forth as the lightenyng. The LORDE God shall blowe the trompet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

^mThe LORDE of hostes shall defende thē, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with slyng stones. They shal drynke ⁊ rage, as it were thorow wyne. They shalbe fylled like ⁿfy basens, ⁊ as ^ofy hornes of ^pfy aulter. The LORDE their God shal deluyere thē in ^qfy daye, as the flock off his people: for the stones off his Sanctuary shalbe set vp in his lāde. O how prosperous and goodly a thyng shall that be? The corne shall make the yonge men chearefull, and the new wyne the maydens.

I wil blowe for them γ gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shall increase, as they increased afore. I wil sowe the amonge the people, γ they maye thinke vpo me in farre countrees: they shal lyue with their childre, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne also from the londe of Egipte, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them in to γ londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante nothyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so γ all the depe floudes shalbe dried vp. The proude boasting of Assur shalbe cast downe, and the scepter off Egipte shall be taken awaye. I wil comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

The xi. Chapter.

^a OPEN thy dores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye Fyrre trees, for the Cedre is fallē, yee all γ proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baasan) for γ mightie stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Fede the shepe of γ slaughter, which shalbe slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they γ sell the, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Yee their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I nomore spare those that dwell in the londe (sayeth the LORDE) but lo, I will deluyer the people, euery man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kyng: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their hondes wil not I deluyer them.

I myself fedde γ slaughter shepe (a poore ³³ flocke verely) and toke vnto me two staues: the one I called lounge mekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. Three shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye with them, nether had they eny delyte in me. Then sayde I: I will fede you nomore, ^d the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe, γ let the rēnaunt eate, euery one the flesh of his neighbour. I toke also my lounge meke staff, and brake it, that I might disannull the conuenaunt, which I made with all people, And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yf ye thynke it good, brynge hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they ^e wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, γ value that I was prysed at. ^e And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluer pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might louse the brotherheade betwixte Iuda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I will rase vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for soch as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shal not norish the thinge that is whole: but he shall eate the flesh off soch as be fat, and teare their clawes in peces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaueth the flocke. The swerde shal come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shalbe clene dried vp, and his right eye shalbe sore blynded.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE hath deuysed for Israel.

A THUS saieith the LORDE, which spred the heauens abrode, "layde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man & breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people & are rounde aboute her: "Yee Iuda himself also shalbe in the sege agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shalbe toarne and rete, and all the people of the earth shalbe gathered together agaynst it.

In that daye (sayeth & LORDE) I will make all horses abashed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, and smyte all the horses of the people with blyndnesse. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabitors off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hoostes their God. B "In that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hote burnynge ouen with wodd, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shal consume all the people rounde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusalem also shalbe inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stondueth.

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Ierusalem, shalbe but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the citsyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shalbe as Dauid: "and the house of Dauid shalbe like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them.

C At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as come agaynst Ierusalem. "Morouer, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the citsyns off Ierusalem, will I poure out the sprete of grace and prayer: "so that they shal loke vpon me, whom they haue pearced: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

IN that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the citsyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, "to wash of synne and vncleennesse. And then (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) I will destroye the names off Idols out off the londe: "so that they shal nomore be put in remembrance.

"As for the false prophetes also and the vnclene sprete, I shall take them out of the londe: So that yf eny off them prophecy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: "Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophecyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his vision when he prophecieth: nether shall they weere sack clothes eny more, to disceauē mē with all. "But he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. B And yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? He shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

"Arise (o thou swearde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the pryncē of my people, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shalbe scatred abrode, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shal saye: LORDE, my God.

The xiiij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the Heithen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shalbe wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shal go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shal not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynst those Heithen, as men vse to fight in the daye of batell. The shall his fete stode vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalem. And y^e mount olyuete shal cleue in two, eastwarde, & westwarde so y^e there shal be a greate valley: & the halff mount shal remoue towarde the north, and the other half towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles shal reach vnto Asal. Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off Osias kynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God shal come, and all sanctes with him. In that daye shal it not be light, but colde and frost. This shalbe that specyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it shal be light. In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the halff parte of them towarde the east see, & the other half towarde the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. And the LORDE himself shalbe kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shal there be one LORDE only, and his name shalbe but one. Men shal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibea to Remmon, and from y^e south to Ierusalem. She shalbe set vp, and inhabited in hir place: From Ben lamins porte, vnto the place of the first porte, and vnto y^e corner porte: and from the tower of Hanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shal be nomore cursinge, but Ierusalem shalbe safely inhabited.

This shalbe the plage, wherwith y^e LORDE wil smyte all people, that haue fought agaynst Ierusalem: Namely, their flesh shall consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corruppe in their holes, and their tunge shal consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greate sedicion amoge them, so that one man shal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neghbour. Iuda shal fight also agaynst Ierusalem, & the goodes of all the Heithen shalbe gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And so shal this plage go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooste, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remaineth then of all y^e people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shal go vp yearly, to worships the kyng (euen y^e LORDE of hoostes) and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worships the kyng (euen the LORDE of hoostes) vpon the same shal come no rayne. Yf the kynred of Egipte go not vp & come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shalbe the plage wherwith y^e LORDE wil smyte all Heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: Yee this shalbe the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shal the rydinge geer of y^e horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES house shal be like the basens before the aluter: yee all the kettels in Ierusalem and Iuda, shalbe holy vnto the LORDE of hoostes: and all they that slaye offerings, shall come and take of them, and dight them therin. And at that tyme there shal be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORDE.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punyishment of the vnthanfulnessse, vnfaithfulnessse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II.

He threatneth punyishment and confucion vnto

the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III.

Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Off the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall prestheade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearfull daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I HAUE loued you, sayeth f LORDE: ad yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Iacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE? yet haue I loued Iacob, and hated Esau: "Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wyldernesse for dragōs. And though Edom sayde: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth f LORDE of hoostes) what they buylded, that brake I downe: b so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, ad ye youre selues must confesse, that f LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shulde not a sonne honour his father, and a seruaut his master? Yf I be now a father, where is myne honoure? "yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the aulter of the LORDE is not to be regarded. Yf ye offre f blynde, is not f euell? "And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cōtent with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

And now make youre prayer before God, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so much as to shut f dores, or to kyndle f fyre vpō myne aulter for naught? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: and as for the meatofferinge, "I wil not accepte it at youre honde. c For from the rysinge vp of f sonne vnto f goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the C

Gentiles : Yee in euery place shal there sacrifice be done, and a clene meatofferynge offred vp vnto my name : for my name is greate amonge the Heithē, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the aulter of ꝑ LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set therupon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye : It is but labour and trauaile, and thus haue ye thought scorne at it, (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) offerynge robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meatofferynge, shulde I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE? Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kyng (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearfull amonge the Heithen.

The ij. Chapter.

AND now (o ye prestes) this commaundement toucheth you : yf ye will not here it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) ^a I wil sende a curse vpon you, & will curse youre blessings : yee curse them will I yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal corrupe youre sede, and cast donge in youre faces : euen the donge of youre solemne feastes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commaundement vnto you : that my couenaunt which I made with Leui, might stonde, sayeth ꝑ LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him : this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me : and so he dyd feare me, ād had my name in reuerence. The lawe of treuth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace ād equyte, ^b and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that men maye seke the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hoostes. But as for you, ye are gone clene out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe : ^c ye haue broken the couenaunt of Leui, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all ꝑ people : because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

^dHaue we not all one father? Hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despyse his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Iuda offended : yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalē, for ^eIuda hath defyled the Sactuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the daughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mā that doth this (yee both the master & the scolary) out off the tabernacle of Iacob, with him that offreth vp meatofferynge vnto the LORDE off hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the aulter of the LORDE is couered with teares, wepyng and mournyng : so that I will no more regarde the meatofferynge, nether wil I receaue or accepte any thinge at youre hōdes.

And yet ye saye : wherefore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte ꝑ and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despyed her : Yet is she thyne owne cōpanyon and married wife.

So dyd not ^fthe one, & yet had he an excellent sprete. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore loke well to youre sprete, & let no man despyse ꝑ wife of his youth. Yf thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel, and ^ggeue her a clothinge for the scorne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Loke well then to youre sprete, and despyse her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye : wherewithall haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye : All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and such please him. Or els where is the God that punysheth?

THESE bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceauē by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfest trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstance in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntruly & peruersly aledged. Treuth it is: A mā's face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether cā it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other darck places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myxte with blynde and cuetous opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of y^e symple, that as longe as they be not cōferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as cuetousnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readeest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the sprete of God (which is the author therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest not herin) y^e prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios translacion. Neuertheles, both because of those y^e be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankegeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to geue thanks vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The thirde boke of Esdras.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The vertuous kynge Osias renueth the seruyce of God, setteth the prestes in their ordre, and holdeth the feast of Easter. Of his death. Of Iechonias his sonne. Of kynge Ioachim and Sedechias.

Chap. II.

God moueth kynge Cyrus to delyuer the presoners, like as he promysed by the prophet Ieremy. Of kynge Artaxerses, by whose auctorite the Iewes are forbydden to buylde vp Ierusalem.

Chap. III.

Of the feast that kynge Darius made, and of the thre yonge men that wrote euery one his sentence, to proue who might saye the best. The first sheweth his mynde.

Chap. IIII.

The seconde goeth aboute to proue his sentence the wisest, but Zorobabel getteth the victory, for the trueth beareth euer the bell. Darius comaundeth to buylde vp Ierusalem agayne.

Chap. V.

What they be & how many, that come agayne to Ierusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon. The tēple and the altare are buylded agayne. The Heithen withstonde them.

Chap. VI.

The officers in Syria laboure vnto kynge Darius, to forbyd the buyldinge of the temple at Ierusalem: but he commaundeth to kepe the ordinance that kynge Cyrus made before.

Chap. VII.

The aduersaries myndes are satisfied, the buyldinge is fynished, and the Passeouer holden.

How Esdras and the other (beinge discharged by the letters and commaudemēt of kynge Artaxerses) go vp to Ierusalem. The complaynte concernynge those, that were defyled and vnleane.

Chap. IX.

Of the counsell that was taken, as touchinge the vnleane mariage.

The first Chapter.

AND Iosias helde the feast of Easter in Ierusalem vnto the LORDE,^a and slewe y^e Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set y^e prestes also in ordre (acordige to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmētes in the tēple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde halowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomō the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon youre shulders. Now serue youre LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre vylлагies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke y^e all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordringe and distribucion of the prynci-call mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childrē of Israel. ^a Kyll [†] Passeouer, & prepare offeringes for youre brethren, and do accordinge to the commaundement of [†] LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto [†] people [†] was foude, Iosias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thousande oxē. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, accordinge as he had promysed: & to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe & an hundreth oxē. Morouer Iechonias & Semeias and Nathanael brethren, & Hasabias, Iehiel and Iosabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundreth bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Leuites stode goodly in their ordre, and had the vleuend bred thorow out [†] trybes. And after the ordninge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses, ^b & so they rosted the Easterlambe as worship was. As for the thak offeringes & the other, they dight thē in ketels & pottes, & sett them before the people with good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vntyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them selues & for their brethren the childrē of Aaron. The syngers also [†] children of Asaph stode in their ordre, accordinge as Dauid had deuysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary & Iedithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. Morouer the porters & dorekeepers stode by the dores & [†] diligently, so [†] none wente out of his standinge & seruyce: for their brethren (the Leuites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offryng of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, & offred thank offeringes besyde [†] sacrifice of [†] LORDE, accordinge to [†] commaundement of kynge Iosias.

¶ So the children of Israel which were thē present helde an honorable Passeouer, & the feast of swete bred vij. dayes lōge. Yee such a Passeouer was not kepte in Israel, from [†] tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the kynges of Israel helde not soch an Easter, as this which kynge Iosias helde, & [†] prestes, [†]

leuites, [†] Iewes & all Israel, of all the [†] were at Ierusalē. In [†] xviii. yeare of [†] raigne of Iosias was this Passeouer kepte. And with a perfecte hert dyd kynge Iosias orde all his workes (before [†] LORDE) & [†] things [†] were wryttē of hī in tymes past, cōcernynge those [†] synned & were vngodly agaynst [†] LORDE before all people, & [†] sought not the worde of [†] LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kynge Iosias, Pharao [†] kynge of Egipte wētē vp, & came towarde [†] Caracmis by Euphrates, & Iosias wētē to mete hī. Then sent the kynge of Egipte vnto Iosias, sayenge: what haue I to do with [†], o kynge of Iuda? I am not sent of [†] LORDE to fight agaynst [†], for my warre is upō Euphrates, go thou [†] waye home agayne in all [†] haist. And Iosias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vndertoke to fight agaynst him, & herkened not vnto [†] worde of [†] prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in [†] felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preassed to kynge Iosias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruantes: [†] Cary me awaye out of the battaill, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruantes toke him awaye out of the front of the battaill. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charet, came to Ierusalē, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Iewry they mourned for Iosias, yee the rulers also with their wyues made lamētacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

These thinges are written in the boke of the stories of [†] kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes & workes of kynge Iosias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wryttē in the boke of the kynges of Israel & Iuda. ^c And [†] people toke Iechonias the sonne of Iosias, & made him kynge in [†] steade of Iosias his father, whan he was xxxij. yeare olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kinge of Egipte put him downe, [†] he shulde not raigne in Ierusalē, & raysed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one talēt of golde. The kinge of Egipte also made Ioachim his brother kynge of Iuda & Ierusalē. As for thē of the kynges counsell with the kynge himself and Zaraceles his brother, he toke thē, & carried thē awaye presoners into Egipte. Fyue

7 twentie yeare olde was Ioachim, whan he was made kyng in the londe of Iuda and Ierusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. ^a After this, Nabuchodonosor 7 kyng of Babylō came vp, bounde him with bandes of yron, 7 caried him vnto Babilō.
 Nabuchodonosor also toke all 7 vessell 7 were halowed in the tēple of the LORDE, 7 all 7 Iewels, 7 caried thē vnto Babilon, 7 brought thē in to his owne tēple at Babilon. Of his vncleennes 7 vngodlynes, it is writtē in 7 boke of the actes of 7 kynges. And Ioachim his sonne raigned in his steade: He was made kyng beinge xviij. yeare olde, 7 raigned but three monethes 7 x. dayes in Ierusalē, 7 dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yeare, Nabuchodonosor sent 7 caused him be brought vnto Babilon with 7 holy vessels of 7 LORDE, 7 made Sedechias his brother kyng of Iuda and Ierusalē, whan he was xxi. yeare olde:
 and he raigned xj. yeare.

And he dyd euell also in 7 sight of 7
 LORDE, 7 cared not for 7 wordes 7 were spokē vnto hi by 7 prophet Ieremy at 7 mouth of the LORDE. ^b And where as he had made on oath vnto kyng Nabuchodonosor, he man-swore himself, 7 fell frō him hauynge a stiff neck 7 hert, 7 trāsgressed all 7 statutes 7 or-dinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel.
 The rulers also 7 heades of 7 people of the LORDE dyd moch euell, 7 became vngodly, more thē the Heithen, beyng defyled in all maner of abhominaciōs: Yee 7 defyled 7 holy tēple of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And the God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto thē, to turne them backe 7 to call thē agayne frō their synnes: for he wolde fayne haue spared thē for his holy tabernacles sake.
 Neuertheles, they had his messaungers in derision: 7 loke what God spake vnto thē by his prophetes, they made but a sporte of it.
 This drew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth with his people for their vngodlynes, 7 tyll he caused the kinges of 7 Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men with the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy tēple, 7 spared no body, nether yonge ner olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all deluyered in to the power of the kynges of 7 Caldees, 7 all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, 7 caried them vnto Babilon. ^c As for the house of the LORDE, they brēt it, 7 brake downe the walles of Ierusalē, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they 7 presoners 7 bōde mē of 7 kyng of Babilon, tyll they were deluy-ered 7 raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest:
^d namely, all the time 7 it laye wayest, had it rest 7 quyetnes lxxvij. yeares.

The ii. Chapter.

NOW whā kyng Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, ^e 7 whā the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde 7 he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy: the LORDE raysed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kyng of the Persiās, so 7 he caused this wrytinge to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kyng of 7 Persians: The LORDE of Israel that hye LORDE hath made me kyng of the lōde, and commanded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Iewry. Yf there be eny now of youre people, 7 LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute 7 place, shal helpe thē, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought with a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē.

Then the pryncipall mē out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Iamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also 7 the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vp therto. Kyng Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornamentes, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon had caried awaye from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deluyered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, and by him they were deliuered to Salmanasar ⁊ debyte in Iewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalē out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerses the kynge of Persia, these men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius ⁊ scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria ⁊ in other places vnder ⁊ dominion therof, Wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerses, wherin they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Iewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy seruantes Rathimus the story wryter, Sabellius the Scribe, ⁊ other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to our lorde the kynge, that the Iewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs in to the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vtterly agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scorne of it, but to shewe it vnto our lorde the kynge, ⁊ to certifie him therof: to the intent ⁊ yf it please the kinge, he maye cause it be sought in the bokes of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warnynge wrytten, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Iewes which dwell therin, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lorde the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded and occupied agayne, ⁊ the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius ⁊ scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are dishobedient, and haue caused moch warre, ⁊ that mightie kynges haue reigned in Ierusalem, which also haue raysed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commaunded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathymus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerses, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people of fote, and forbad them to buylde. And so they left of from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kynge Darius.

The iij. Chapter.

KYNGE Darius made a greates feast vnto A his seruantes, vnto all his courte, ⁊ to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes ⁊ rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundreth ⁊ xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let every one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kinge Darius geue greates giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and couerings: he shall make him a costly charett ⁊ a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde ⁊ pryncipall nexte vnto kynge Darius, ⁊ that because of his wysdome, and shalbe called ⁊ kynges kynsman.

So euery one wrote his meaninge, sealed it B and layed it vnder the kynges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kyng aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whose worde the kyng and his chefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secōde wrote: The kyng is strōger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges ȝ trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kyng was rysen vp, they toke their wrytinges and delyuered them vnto him, and so he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chefe lordes, all the debytes & rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for ȝ yonge mē, ȝ they might declare their meanynges thē selues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, ȝ kyng sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) & sayde: O ye men, wyne is maruelous strōger,^a and ouercōmeth them ȝ drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, & bryngeth both the poore man & ȝ kyng to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also with the bondman and with the fre, with the poore & ryche: it taketh awaye their understandinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that ȝ thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kyng, nor ȝ he is in auctorite, & ȝ he ought not to do soch thinges. Morouer, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness and loue: but as soone as they are dronckē, they drawe out the swerde & wil fight: & whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, & so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tonge.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN the secōde (which had sayde, ȝ the kyng was stronger) beganne to

speake, sayēge: O ye men, are not they the strongest & most excellent, ȝ cōquere the lōde & the see, & all ȝ is in ȝ see & in the earth? Now is the kyng lorde of all these thinges, & hath dominion of thē all: & loke what he cōmaūdeth, it is done. Yf he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles & towres. They are slayne, & slaye (other men) them selues, & ouer passe not ȝ kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they brynge the kyng all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other ȝ medle not with warres and fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge trybute vnto ȝ kyng. And yf ȝ kyng alone do but cōmaunde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaunde to forgeue, they forgeue: yf he cōmaunde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he commaunde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaunde to plante, they plāte. The comon people & ȝ rulers are obediēt vnto him. And ȝ kyng in the meane season sytteth hī downe, eateth and drynketh, & taketh his rest: thē kepe they watch rōūde aboute ȝ kinge, & not one of thē darre gett him out of ȝ waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto ȝ kinge at a worde. Iudge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde B (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of wemen & of ȝ trueth) begāne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not ȝ greate kyng, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine ȝ excelleth: Who is it thē, ȝ hath ȝ lordshipe ouer thē? Haue not wemen borne the kyng, & all ȝ people ȝ rule these thinges? Haue not wemē borne thē, & brought thē vp, ȝ plante the vynes, wherout ȝ wyne cōmeth? They make garmētes for all mē, they geue honour vnto all men, & with out wemen can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde & syluer & all precious thinges, & se a fayre & wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, & gape vpon her, & haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer & golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueth his father^b & brought him vp, he leaueth his owne naturall cōūtre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then ye must nedes knowe, ŷ wemen haue ŷ domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde α goeth his waye to steale, to kyll, to murther, to sayle vpon the see, α seyth a lyon, and goeth in the darknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaue α robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes α become bondmen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished, α haue bene slayne, α haue synned because of wemen.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, α all lōdes stōde in awe of him, α no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, ŷ Apame (ŷ daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpō the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Morouer, the kynge loked vpō her with open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, α to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not wemen then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge α the prynces loked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueth: O ye men, are not wemē stronger? Greate is the earth, hie is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compasseth the heauen rounde aboute, α fetcheth his course agayne to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trueth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, wemen are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. *α*As for ŷ trueth, it endureth, and is allwaye stronge: it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

D The trueth accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte rych or poore, betwixte ŷ mightie or symple, but doth right vnto euery mā, whether they be euel or good, α all men are louynge dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kingdome α power and maiesty for euermore. Blessed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all ŷ people cried α sayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Axe what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye when thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Ierusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Iewels, that were taken awaye out of Ierusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne: And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Ierusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is ŷ maiesty, which, I desyre α axe of the: that thou performe the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

E Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kyssed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all ŷ lordes and nobles, ŷ they shulde conueye him forth, α all them ŷ wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all ŷ shreues ŷ were in Celosyria α Phenices, α vnto Libanus, ŷ they shulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Ierusalem, to buylde ŷ cite withall. Morouer he wrote vnto all ŷ Iewes that were gone out of his realme in to Iewry because of the freedom, ŷ no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shulde geue ouer the cities and vyllages of the Iewes, which they had taken in: yee α that they shulde yearly geue xx. talētes to ŷ buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brent offeringes (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly also: And y^e all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they ⁊ their children, and all the prestes.

F He wrote the greatnesse also, ⁊ commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen the, wherein they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Leuites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Ierusalem buylded vp: and commaunded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell y^e Cyrus had separated from Babilon: ⁊ all y^e Cyrus had geue in comaundement, y^e same charged he also, y^e it shulde be done, ⁊ sent vnto Ierusalem. Now when this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Ierusalē, ⁊ prayed y^e kinge of heauē, ⁊ sayde: Of y^e cometh victory, of the cometh wysdome ⁊ clearnesse, ⁊ I am thy seruaunt. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wysdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, ⁊ wente vnto Babilon: And when he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethre y^e were at Babilō, ⁊ they prayed y^e God of their fathers, y^e he had geue them refreszshinge ⁊ lyberte to go vp, ⁊ to buylde Ierusalē ⁊ the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes ⁊ gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

The b. Chapter.

AFTER this, were the prynciall mē of all y^e vyllagies chosen in the trybes ⁊ kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wiues and children, with their seruauntes and maydens, with all their catell ⁊ substance. And Darius the kyng sent with them a thousande horsmen, to conueye them safely vnto Ierusalem: and their brethre were glad, playenge vpon instrumētes, and synginge.

And these are the names of the mē, which wente vp out of the vyllagies accordinge to the trybes. Of the prestes, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Aaron: Iesus the sonne of Iosedec, Ioachim the sonne of Zorobabel^a the sonne of Salathiel (of the kynred of Dauid, out of the kynred of Phares, of the trybe of Iuda) which spake wonderfull thinges vnder Darius the kyng of Persia, in y^e seconde yeaere of his raigne in the first moneth of Nisan.

These also are they of Iewry, which came vp and turned Agayne vnto Ierusalem, out of the captiuite that Nabuchodonosor y^e kyng of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. And euery man sought his porcion agayne in Iewry, his cite, they that came with Zorobabel, and with Iesus, Nehemias, Saraia, Raelaias, Elimeus, Emmanius, Mardocheus, Beelserus, Mechpsa, Rochor, Olorus, Emonias, one of their prynces.

And the nobre of the, accordinge to their kynreddes ⁊ rulers, was. The childre of Phares, two thousande, an hundredth ⁊ lxxij. The children of Ares, iij. M. an C. and lvij. sonnes of Euther: The sonnes of El Isab, iij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Emerus, ij. C. and liij. The sonnes of Fasurius, iij. C. and lviij. The sonnes of Carea, ij. C. and xxvij. The Levites: The sonnes of Iesus in Cadubel and Banus, and Serebias, and Edeas, seuentie and foure.

C The whole nombre of these from xij. yeares, was iij. M. iiij. C. and lxij. Of the sonnes, daughters and wyues, the whole summe was iiij. M. ij. C. and xliij. The sonnes of the prestes that prayed God in the temple: The sonnes of Asaph, of whom there were an C. and xxvij. But the dore keepers were: The children of Esmenus: The children of Aser: The children of Amon: The children of Acuba, Topa: The children of Tobî: an C. and xxxix. in all.

The prestes that serued in the temple: The sonnes of Sel, the sonnes of Gaspha, the sonnes of Tobloch, the sonnes of Caria, the sonnes of Sub, the sonnes of Heliu, the sonnes of Labana, ŷ sonnes of Armacha, ŷ sonnes of Acub, the sonnes of Vtha, the sonnes of Cetha, the sonnes of Aggab, the sonnes of Obay, the sonnes of Anani, the sonnes of Cana, ŷ sonnes of Geddu, ŷ sonnes of An, ŷ sonnes of Radin, ŷ sonnes of Desanon, the sonnes of Nechoba, the sonnes of Caseba, the sonnes of Goza, the sonnes of Ozul, the sonnes of Sinona, the sonnes of Atra, ŷ sonnes of Hastem, ŷ sonnes of Asiana, ŷ sonnes of Manei, ŷ sonnes of Nasisin, ŷ sonnes of Accufa, ŷ sonnes of Agista, ŷ sonnes of Azui, ŷ sonnes of Fauon, the sonnes of Phasalon, the sonnes of Meeda, the sonnes of Suta, the sonnes of Cared, ŷ sonnes of Barcus, the sonnes of Sarea, ŷ sonnes of Coesi, ŷ sonnes of Nasit, ŷ sonnes of Agista, the sonnes of Pedon: Salomon his sonnes, the sonnes of Asophot, the sonnes of Phazida, the sonnes of Celi, ŷ sonnes of Dedon, the sonnes of Gaddahel, the sonnes of Zapheus, ŷ sonnes of Aggia, the sonnes of Sacharet, ŷ sonnes of Sabathē, the sonnes of Saroneth, ŷ sonnes of Malsit, ŷ sonnes of Ania, ŷ sonnes of Sasus, ŷ sonnes of Addus, ŷ sonnes of Suba, ŷ sonnes of Eura, ŷ sonnes of Rahotis, the sonnes of Phasphat, ŷ sonnes of Malmon. All these mynistred in the Sanctuary, and were seruauntes of Salomon: euen iij. C. and lxxxij.

Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Carmelā and Careth) and might not shewe forth their cities and kynredde, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus, ŷ sonnes of Tubē, ŷ sonnes of Nechodaicus. Of ŷ prestes ŷ executed ŷ office of ŷ presthode, and were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, ŷ sonnes of Achisos, the sonnes of Addin, which married one of ŷ daughters of Phargeleu, and were named, after him. The writinge of ŷ same kynred was sought in ŷ register of their generacion, but it was not foude: and therefore were they forbydde to execute ŷ office of ŷ presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas, ŷ they shulde haue no porcion in ŷ Sanctuary, tyll there rose vp an hie prest, ŷ were well instructe in the playne clearnes and trueth. Of all Israel (besyde seruauntes and maydens) there were xliij. M. iiij. C. and xl. Now were there of seruauntes and maydens, vij. M. iiij. C. and xxxvj. Of synginge mē and synginge women there were ij. C. and lxv. Foure hundred and xxxv. Camels. Seuen thousande and xxxvj. horses. Two hundred thousande and xlv. Mooles. Fyue thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, when they came to Ierusalem, and wolde buylde and sett vp ŷ tēple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the tēple, to ŷ treasure and to ŷ seruyce of the Sactuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, and an hundred prestes garments. And so dwelt the prestes and the Levites, and the people ŷ wente out to Ierusalē and in the cōuntrie there aboute, the syngers also and the porters, euery one of Israel in his owne lande.

E So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childrē of Israel were euery man at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the courte, which was before ŷ east dore. And there stode Iesua the sonne of Iosedec and his brethern ŷ prestes, and Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethern, settinge vp an aluter, to offre brent sacrifices vpon it, as it is writen in ŷ lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other cōuntries, and the Heithen out of all londes set vp the aluter in his place, and offred sacrifices and brent offerynges vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe.^d ^b Leui. 23. f.

And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. "And all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of \hat{y} seuēth moneth to offre vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylded. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpēters, money, meate τ drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes, \hat{y} they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to be ieastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the hauen of Ioppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians.

And in the seconde yeare they came in to the temple of God at Ierusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel^b the sonne of Salathiel, and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and their brethren the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Ierusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, τ layed the foundacion of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yeare \hat{y} they were come in to Iewry and Ierusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yeare olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Iesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and perfourmed the lawe τ ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

And the prestes stode and had their garments τ trompettes, τ the Leuites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng thanks, and prayes vnto the LORDE, acordinge as Dauid the kynge of Israel had ordeyned.^c And the songe that they dyd synge vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O synge vnto the LORDE,^d for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and sunge with loude voyce, praysynge the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came also from amonge the prestes and Leuites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the trybes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpō the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Iuda and Ben Iamin,^e to knowe what that trōpettyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued \hat{y} it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, τ wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Iesua and to the rulers of the vyllages, τ sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde with you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE, τ we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Aszbazareth the kinge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Iesua and the rulers of the villages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God with vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus^f the kynge of the Persians hath commaūded vs.

But the Heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Iewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpō them preuely, stopped soch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde, τ hyndered those that made the passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished: τ this contynued so longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: τ so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yeare, vntill \hat{y} raigne of kynge Darius.

The vi. Chapter.

NOT with standinge, in the seconde yeare^g of the raigne of Darius,^h Aggeus τ Zachary the sonne of Addo prophecied vpon them in Iewry and Ierusalem, in the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec stode vp,ⁱ and beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden τ commaūded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Neuer-theles the elders of the Iewes had soch grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked therto) but buylded on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaued from him. The letter that these men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

B Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the land lordes with their cōpaniōs, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Iewry, ⁊ wente to Ierusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greате house of God and the tēple, with greате costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greате haist with the worke, ⁊ helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greате diligence ⁊ worshiپe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cōmaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to ȝ intēt that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those ȝ were ȝ rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answer: we are the seruantes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: ⁊ as for this house,^a it hath bene buylded and set vp afore tyme by the greате and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, ⁊ synned agaynst the God of Israel, ^bhe gaue thē ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe ȝ house and brēt it, and caried away the people presoners vnto Babilon.

C Neuertheles, in the first year that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon,^c Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buyld vp this house agayne: and all the ornaments that Nabuchodonosor caried away from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and deluyered them to Zorobabel ⁊ to Salmanasar the vndershreue, commaundynge them, ȝ they shulde brynge those same ornamentes agayne to Ierusalē in to ȝ tēple, ⁊ to begynne from ȝ tyme forth, to buyld the tēple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of ȝ LORDES house at Ierusalem, and euer sence haue they buylded, ⁊ yet is it not ended. And therfore (O kynge) yf thou thynkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries ⁊ rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde thē, that it is done with the counsell and cōsent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lorde ȝ kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

D Then cōmaunded kynge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries:^d and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first year of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, ȝ the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem shulde be buylded agayne (⁊ odoures to be made there contynually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, ȝ bredth lx. cubites ⁊ iij. square with thre hewen stones, with a loft of tymbre of the same cōuntre, yee with a new loft, ⁊ the expenses therof to be geuen of ȝ house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornamētes of golde ⁊ syluer, ȝ Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Ierusalē, where they were afore. Sysennes also the vndershreue in Syria and Phenices, ȝ prynces and their companions, and the other ȝ be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

E I Cyrus haue cōmaunded also, that they shal buyld the house of the LORDE whole vp: ⁊ haue ordeyned them, to helpe those ȝ be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: ⁊ out of the tribute and taxinge that is yearly raysed vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be deluyered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, ⁊ corne, salt, wyne and oyle, and that contynually euery year: after the expences which the prestes that be at Ierusalem, shew to be made daylie:^e this shalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hyst God, for the kynge and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on euery syde, that who so euer breaketh or despyseth this cōmaundement of ȝ kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) ⁊ all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto \hat{y} kynge. The LORDE therefore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all \hat{y} kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncruteously with the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. I Darius the kinge haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN Sysennes \hat{y} vndershreue in Celosyria and Phenices, and the other landlordes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordered, were diligent in the holy workes, τ were fellow helpers with the olde rulers of the Iewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they perfourmed all thinges thorow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerses kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxij. daye of the moneth Addar in \hat{y} vij. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes τ the Leuites, τ the other that were come out of captiuyte, τ soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedicacion of the temple they offred an hundredth oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lambes, τ xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after \hat{y} nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also τ the Leuites stode arayed in the prestly garmetes, after \hat{y} trybes, ouer all \hat{y} workes of the LORDE God of Israel, acordinge to \hat{y} boke of Moses, and the porters by all the dores.

E And the children of Israel (with those \hat{y} were come out of captiuyte) helde the Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Leuites were sanctified. They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Leuites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kylled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes τ for them selues. And the childre of Israel \hat{y} came out of captiuyte, τ escaped frō all \hat{y} abhominacions of the Heithē, sought the LORDE, and kepte the feast of vneleuended bred vij. daies longe, eatinge τ drynkyng τ were mery before the LORDE: \hat{y} the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, τ comforted their handes to the workes of \hat{y} LORDE God of Israel.

The viij. Chapter.

AND after him, whan Artaxerses the kynge of \hat{y} Persiās reigned,^a there wete vnto him Eszdras the sonne of Saraías, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, \hat{y} sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, \hat{y} sonne of Eleazar, \hat{y} sonne of Aaron \hat{y} first prest. This Eszdras wete vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in \hat{y} lawe of Moses, \hat{y} was geue of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught τ done in dede.) And \hat{y} kinge fauoured him, τ dyd him greate worshipe and honoure, after all his desyes. There wente vp with him also certayne of \hat{y} children of Israel, of the prestes, of \hat{y} Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of \hat{y} temple at Ierusalem.

In the vij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerses, in the v. moneth, \hat{y} is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, τ came the hye waye to Ierusalē after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Eszdras gat greate instruccion, \hat{y} he shulde leaue none of \hat{y} thinges behynde, which were in \hat{y} lawe τ cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteuousnes τ iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerses, τ deliuered \hat{y} wrytinges (\hat{y} were come frō Artaxerses the kynge) to Eszdras the prest τ reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is \hat{y} cōpye of \hat{y} letter: Kynge Artaxerses sendeth his gretinge vnto Eszdras the prest τ reder of the lawe of \hat{y} LORDE: Of frendshipe τ good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Iewes, of \hat{y} prestes τ Leuites in my realme, which desyreth τ is contēt to go with the vnto Ierusalē, \hat{y} he maye do it. Therefore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let the come together, τ go with the (like as I am contēt τ my vij. frendes my cōcelers:) to se what they do at Ierusalē τ in lewry, τ kepe \hat{y} thinges acord-

 Artaxerxes haue commaunded the keepers of \hat{y} treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Eszdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdreth vessels of wyne,
 and other plenteous thinges without nombre.
 Let all thinges be done after the lawe of \hat{y} hyst God, that the wrath of God aryse not in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes.
 I commaunde you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Leuites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Eszdras) set thou iudges and arbiters in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all such as are ignoraunt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyshed.

Then sayde Eszdras \hat{y} wryter: Blessed be \hat{y} God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyl in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house \hat{y} is at Ieru-salem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of \hat{y} kynge, of his counsell, of his frēdes and of his nobles. And so I was sted-fast in my mynde, acordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades^a (after their kynreds α houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerxes: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of \hat{y} sonnes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of Dauid, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captaine of Moablon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C. and
 l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Iechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx.
 with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Iob, Abdias Ieheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Salimoth the sonne of Iosaphia, and with him an
 C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij.
 men. Of the sonnes of Eseud, Iohannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam \hat{y}
 sonne of Gebel and Semeias, α with him lxx.
 men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

^bAs for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, α Eccelom, and Masman, α Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Ioribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū
 (these were the leders and men of expēcie) α I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury, α commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddeus and to his brethren α to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE oure God. And with the mightie hāde of oure LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experience, from amōge the sonnes of Moolius, the sonne of Leui, \hat{y} sonne of Israel,
 Sebebeiam α the sonnes α his brethrē Aszbin

¶ Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amonge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, ¶ their sonnes were xx. men. And of them ¶ seruēd in the temple, whom Dauid had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wrytynge.

¶ Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto ¶ yonge men before the LORDE, ¶ I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney ¶ a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for our children and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: ¶ I durst not require of the kynge men of horse ¶ of fote, to conueye vs safely agaynst our enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that ¶ power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him with their whole hert. And therefore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge ¶ rulers of the people, ¶ from ¶ prestes of ¶ temple xij. men, ¶ Sebeia ¶ Asania, ¶ ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied thē the golde ¶ the syluer ¶ all the prestly ornamētes of the house of oure God, which the kynge ¶ his councell, ¶ his prynces ¶ whole Israel had geuē. And whan I had weyed it, I gauē thē an Cl. talētes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, ¶ of goldē vessell seuē tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, ¶ saide vnto thē: ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, ¶ the vessels are holy, ¶ the golde ¶ the syluer is promised vnto the LORDE the God of oure fathers. Be diligent now ¶ kepe it, vntill the tyme ¶ ye delyuer it to the rulers of the people, to ¶ prestes, to the Leuites ¶ to ¶ pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Ierusalem, ¶ in the chambre of the house of oure God.

¶ So ¶ prestes ¶ the Leuites which receaued of me the golde,^a the syluer ¶ the vessell, brought it to Ierusalē in to the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Ierusalē. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde ¶ syluer was delyuered in ¶ house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Ior the prest, ¶ with him was Eleazar ¶ sonne of Phineas, and with thē were Iosabudus ¶ sonne of Iesnet, Medias ¶ the sonne of Banus, ¶ certayne of the Leuites to the nombre ¶ to the waighte: ¶ the waight of them was writtē vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: euē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thank-offeringe, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And ¶ kinges cōmission delyuered they vnto ¶ stewardes and debytes of the kynge, and to the vndersheures in Celosyria and Phenices.

¶ Now whan these thinges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and sayde: The generacion of Israel, the prynces, ¶ prestes and Leuites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclennesse, from the Cananites, Hethites, Pheresites, from the Moabites, Egipcians ¶ Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mengled them selues with the daughters of them, ¶ the holy sede is mixte with the outlandish Heithen, ¶ sens the begynnynge of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thinges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out ¶ hayre of my heade ¶ my beerd, ¶ sat me downe soroufull ¶ heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice. Then stode I vp frō fastynge, hauynge rente clothes ¶ the holy garmēt, kneeled downe vpon my knees, helde out my hādes vnto ¶ LORDE, ¶ sayde: O LORDE, I am confounded ¶ ashamed before thy face, for oure synnes are become many vpon oure heades, ¶ oure wickednesses are exalted vnto the heauē: for sens ¶ tyme of oure fathers we are in greate sinne vnto this daye. And for the synnes of vs ¶ oure fathers, we with oure brethren ¶ with oure prestes haue bene deliuered vnto the kinges of the earth, in to the swerde, ¶ in to captiuite, ¶ became a spoyle with confucion ¶ shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy ¶ we have gottē of the? in ¶ thou hast left vs a rote ¶ a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discouer oure light in the house of J LORDE oure God, a geuē vs meate at all tymes of our ministracion. And whan we were in captiuyte, we were not forsaken of the LORDE oure God: but he made the kynges of Persia gracious a fauourable vnto vs, so J they gaue vs vytayles a meate, yee a leue to buylde vp the tēple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre the waisted places of Sion, and to dwell in Iewry a Ierusalem. And now O LORDE, what shall we saye, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gauest vnto vs by the handes of thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe J ye go vnto, a J is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the vnclennes a fylthynes of the Heithen, a with their abhominacion haue they poluted it altogether. Therefore shal ye not ioyn^e youre daughters vnto their sonnes, ner mary youre sonnes vnto their daughters: Morouer, ye shall neuer seke to make peace with them, J ye maye increase a eate the best in the lande, a J ye maye deuyde J inheritance of the laude vnto youre children for euermore. As for the thinge J now happeneth vnto vs, it commeth all for oure wicked workes and greate synnes. yet hast thou geuen vs soch a rote, J we are come againe in to oure owne londe: and we are so wicked, J we haue brokē thy statutes a cōmaundementes agayne, a mengled oure selues with the vnclēnes of the outlandish Heithen. O LORDE, art thou angrie with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out? J oure rote a name remayne nomore? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this present daye. And beholde, now are we before J in oure synnes, now can we not stonde before the in them.

b And whan Esdras with this prayer had knowleged the synne, wepinge^b a lyēge flatt vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Ierusalem a greate multitude of men a wemen, of yonge men a maydens, for there was a very greate wepinge and mournynge in the cōgregacion. So whan Iechonias the sonne Ieheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde vnto Esdras: we haue synned agaynst the LORDE, because we haue married outlandish women of the Heithē. Now art thou ouer all Israel.

We wil swære an ooth therfore vnto J LORDE, J we shal put awaye all oure wyues which we haue takē of the Heithē, with their childrē: like as it is appoynted the by oure fore elders. Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordige to the lawe of J LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto J , a we wyl helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Esdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of J prestes a of J Leuites a of all Israel, to do after these thinges, and they sware.

The ix. Chapter.

a THEN Esdras stode vp from the courte of the tēple without, a wente in to the chāber of Ionathas the sonne of Nasabus, a remayned there, a ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all Iewry a at Ierusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Ierusalē out of captiuyte, J who so euer came not to Ierusalē within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of counsell) his goodes shulde be taken from him, a he excluded from the cōgregacion of the captiuyte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Iuda a Ben Iamin gathered together at Ierusalem, the xx. daye of J ix. moneth. And J whole multitude sat trēblinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Esdras arose vp, a sayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteously, in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage, a so to increase the synnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same, a geue prayse vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers, a perfourme his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe, a from the outlandish wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, a sayde: like as thou hast spokē, so wil we do: But for so moch as the people b are many, a J wynter here, we maie not stōde without J house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, J can be fynished in a daye or two, for we be many J haue synned in these thinges: Ordene therfore, J the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandish wyues, the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they

lowse vp the wrath of the LORDE in this busynes.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Ezeli, & Ozias and Thecam receaued þ charge of this matter, & Bozoramus, & Leius and Sabatheus helped thē therto. After this, all they stode vp & were come out of captiuyte. And Eszdras the prest chos vnto him the pryncipall men from amonge the fathers accordinge to their names, & in the new moone of the tenth moneth they sat together, to examen this matter. And so the matter was a determyng (concernynge the men þ had outlandish wyues) vntill the new moone of the first moneth. And of the prestes þ had mixte thē selues with outlandish wyues, there were founde:^a Of the sonnes of Iesu the sonne of Iosedec & his brethren, Mazeas, Eleazer, Ioribus & Ioadeus, which offred them selues to put away their wyues, & to offre a ramme for their ignoraunce. And of the sonnes of Gemmeri, Masseas, & Esses & Ieelech Azarias. Of þ sonnes of Fosera, Limosias, Hismaen, Nathanea, Iussio, Ieddus, & Talsas. And of the Leuites, Iosabodus, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Facteas, Colnas and Elionas. Of the syngers of the Sactuary, Eliarib, Zackarus. Of the porters, Sallumus & Tolbanes. And of Israel, of the children of Foro, Osi & Remias, & Geddias, & Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarus, Iemebias & Bannas. And of the childrē of Iolaman, Chianas, Zachary, Ietzrelus, Ioddus, Erimoth & Elias. And of þ sonnes of Iathoim, Eliadas, Liasamus, & Zochias, Larimoth, Sabdis & Tebedias. And of þ sonnes of Zebeas, Iohānes Amanias, Zabdias, & Emeus. And of the sonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Ieddus, Iasub, Asabus & Ierimoth. And of þ sonnes of Addin, Naatus & Moosias & Caleus & Raanas Maasuas, Mathathias, Besel, Bannus, and Manasses.

And of the sonnes of Naue, Nones, Afeas, Melchias, Sameas, Simō, Ben Iamin, Malchus & Marras. And of the sonnes of Asom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manasses, Semei. Of the sonnes of Bannus, Ieremy, Moodias, Abamas, Iohel, Baneas, Pelias, Iona, Marimoth, Eliasib, Mathaneus, Eliasis, Orizas, Dielus, Semedius, Zambris & Ioseph. Of þ sonnes of Nobeus, Idelus, Mathathias, Sabadus, Zecheda, Sedmi, Iesseus, & Baneas. All these had takē outlādish wemē to mariage, & they put thē awaye with their childrē.

The prestes & Leuites, & all they þ were of Israel, dwelt at Ierusalem & thorow out all þ londe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth, & the childrē of Israel were in their dwellynges. And þ whole multitude came together vpon þ floore at þ east syde^b of the holy porte of þ tēple. And they spake vnto Eszdras þ hie prest & reder, þ he wolde bryng þ lawe of Moses, which was geuē of þ LORDE God of Israel. So Eszdras the hie prest brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, & to all prestes, þ they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth. And he red in þ floore þ is before þ holy porte of þ tēple, from the mornynge early vntill the euenynge, before men & wemen. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Eszdras the prest & reder of þ lawe stode vp vpon a scaffolde of wodd, which was made therefore: & vpon his right hande there stode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Vrias, Ozechias, & Balsamus: Vpon his lefte hāde stode Faldeus, Misael, Malachias, Abuschas, Sabus, Nabadias, & Zachary. Then toke Eszdras þ boke before the whole multitude, for he was þ pryncipall and had in most honoure of thē all. And whā he had red out þ lawe, they stode all straight vp vpon their fete. So Eszdras prayned the LORDE the most hye God, the Allmightie God of hoostes. And all þ people answered, Amen: & helde vp their hādes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, & prayned þ LORDE: Iesus, Beneas, Sarebias, Iaddimus, Accubus, Sabatheus, Calithes, Azarias, Ioradus, Ananias, & Philias the Leuites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, & red the lawe of the LORDE in the cōgregation, & euery man sett those before þ vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Atharathes vnto Eszdras the hye prest & reder, & to the Leuites þ taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: & all they þ had herde the lawe, wepte. So Eszdras sayde:^c Departe youre waye then, & eate the best, & drynke the swetest, & sende giftes vnto them þ haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, ⁊ sent rewardes vnto thẽ y had nothinge, y they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thorow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Ierusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the couenaunt of y^e LORDE God of Israel.

The first Chapter.

A THE seconde booke of ꝑ prophet Esdras:^a (ꝑ sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, ꝑ sonne of Helchia, ꝑ sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoe, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was presoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerses kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Go thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childrē the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. B Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & despyed my counceils. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & nourture. How longe shal I forbearē them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes:^c Pharaο with his seruantes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne:^d All ꝑ nacions haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in ꝑ east haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE:^e "I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnynge. I gaue you Moses to be youre captayne, and Aaron to be the prest:^f I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wōders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

C Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gaue you quales to eate, and tentes for youre succoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and ascribed not ꝑ victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the wilderness, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wilderness, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued ꝑ Egipcians, then to dye in this wilderness. Thē had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I hew ꝑ hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with ꝑ leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saieth the LORDE?

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:^g "Whan ye were in the wilderness, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to ꝑ water, and made the ryuer swete. What shall I do vnto the, O Iacob? Thou Iuda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those wil I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsakē me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. "Whan ye call vpō me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytt manslaught. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:^h "I haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a norse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chекens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. "Whan ye offre vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for your solempne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes, a THUS sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my cōmaundementes by my seruantes y prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despysed my counsels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow ⁊ forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE youre God, and done y thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsakē: go youre waye (o my children) and axe mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childrē, which wolde not kepe my couenant: y thou brynge them to cōfucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abroad amonge the Heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorne of my couenant.

b Wo be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and aszshes. Euen so also wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, y I will geue them the kyngdome of Ierusalem, which I wolde haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether labourer ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, ⁊ ye shall receaue it. Praye for youre selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therin. Now is the kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

c And those that be deed wyll I rayse vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruantes Esay and Ieremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified ⁊ prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylck and hony, ⁊ seuen mountaynes, whervpō there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y poore: defende the cōfortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde ⁊ yonge within thy walles: where so euer thou fyndest the deed, tokē them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde styll (O my people) and take thy rest, for thy quyetes is come. Fede thy children O thou good norse, establish their fete: As for the seruantes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke thẽ from thy nombre, vexe not thy self.

For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be soroufull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothings agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childrē, for I wyll deluyer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childrē, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Enbrace thy childrē, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Eszdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came vnto thẽ, they set me at naught, and despysed the commaundement of ꝑ LORDE. And therefore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euermore. Fle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulness of youre glory. I testifie my sauoure openly: O receaue the gift ꝑ is geuen you, and be glad, geuyng thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heavenly kyngdome. Aryse vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmētes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shut vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longested for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnynge, maye be halowed.

I Eszdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a grete people, whom I coude not nombre, ꝑ they all prayded the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuyng. And in the myddest of thẽ there was a yonge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed ꝑ angell, ꝑ sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified ꝑ knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, ꝑ geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is ꝑ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commend them, that stode so stify for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

The iij. Chapter.

IN the thirtie yere of the fall of the cite, ꝑ I was at Babilon ꝑ laye troubled vpō my bed, ꝑ my thoughtes came vp ouer my hert: for I sawe ꝑ desolacion of Sion, ꝑ the plenteous wealth of them ꝑ dwelt at Babilon: ꝑ my sprete was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hiest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnynge, whan thou plantēdest ꝑ earth, (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto ꝑ people, and a body vnto Adam, ^a which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradise, which gardē of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundemēt to loue ꝑ waye, which he transgressed, ꝑ immediatly thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people, ꝑ kynredes out of nombre. ^c And euery people walked after their owne wil, and did nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despysed them.

^d But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou leftest: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, whan they ſ dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greате people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, ^a thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewedst thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge couenaunt with him, promisinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. ^b And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Iacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Iacob became a greате multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest the vp to the mount Sion, ^c bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouyng the grounde, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Iacob, and diligence vnto the generaciō of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from the that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was ouercome, and so be all they ſ are borne of him. ^d Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. ^e Then didest thou rase the vp a seruauit called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offre vp incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabitants of the cite forsoke the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, ſ they shal therfore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greате wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in ſ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest ſ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, ^f this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceauce how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, ſ knoweth the, sayynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued ſ couenautes, as Iacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labour hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the Heithē, ^g I see, ſ they be rych ^h wealthy, ⁱ theynke not vpon ſ commaundementes. Weye thou therfore oure wickednesse now in ſ balauce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be no where founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, ſ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and Heithen.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND the angell that was sent vnto me ^a (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the Hyest. Then sayde I: yee my lorde. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from whēce the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greате water springes are vpon f firmamēt? Or how greate water spraynges are in the begynnynge of the depe? Or which are the outgoings of Paradise? Peraduētūre thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to f depe ner hell, nether dyd I euer clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast traauayled, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answeere of them.

B He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and such as are growne vp with f , canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cōprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstōde the corrupcion f is eydent in my sight? Thē sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thē that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deucey and sayde: ^a Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddes.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deucey, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make our lond the wyder. The thought and deucey of the wodd was but wayne and nothings worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewise to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stoped them.

C Yf thou were iudge now betwyxte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuyed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me r sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: ^b euen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstōde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thinges, that are aboue the hea-uens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseeke the (O LORDE) let me haue vnderstōdinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle withall: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the Heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of vngodly naciōs: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenantes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshpores, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt maruel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehend the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, ^c for this worlde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruction therof is not yet come. Yf the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where f euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come f is sowne with f good. For the corne of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnynge, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet brynge forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

E Pondre now by thyself, whā f corne of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are oure yeares few r euell? And he answered me, sayēge: Haist not thou to moch vpon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in wayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not f soules also of the righteous axe question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpō this Ieremiel the archangel gaue them answeere, and sayde: ^d Euē whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balauce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barne of the righteous shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell vpon earth.

f So he answered me, & sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childesbed maye kepe y byrth eny lōger within her. The sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like y preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauayleth, maketh haist, whan the tyme & necessite of the byrth is at hande: Euē so doth she haist to delyuer it that is comytted vnto her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therefore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come the is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

6 And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, & beholde, an whote burnyng ouē wente ouer before me: & it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wete ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne with a storme: & whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, euen so y measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: May I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shall happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of the in a parte: but as touchinge * y life, I may not shewe the, for I am not sent therefore.

* Some rede, my life.

The b. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greate nombre, & the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the londe that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, & bloude shal droppe out of wodd, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyte: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the foules shal flyt, and the Sodomitish see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, & menstruous women shal beare monsters, and salt waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secrete places, & shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousness gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge op-tayne: they shal laboure, but their wayes shall not prospere.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue leue, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, & wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulness wente thorow all my body, & my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

And in the seconde night it happened, y Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene?

and why is thy countenance so heuy? Knowest thou not, y Israel is commytted vnto the, in the londe of their captyute? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: ¶ he herde it, and as I sayde, so wete he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that y thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, ¶ my soule receaued y sprete of vnderstandynge, ¶ I began to talke with the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of y earth ¶ of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen y one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the groude thou hast chosen the one lylie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all y foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell y are made, thou hast prouyded y one shepe: ¶ amoge all y multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou loudest, thou gauest a lawe, y is proued of all.

¶ And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? ¶ vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred y one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde y promyses, ¶ neuer beleued y couenautes? And though thou werest enemye vnto y people, yet shuldest thou punysh the with thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell y came to me y night afore, was sēt vnto me, ¶ sayde vnto me: Heare me, ¶ herke to y thinge y I saye, ¶ I shal tell y more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed ¶ troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou y people better, then him y made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grefe ¶ cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not.

And I sayde: wherefore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my graue? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Iacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

¶ And he sayde vnto me: Nōbre me y thinges, y are not yet come: gather me together y droppes, that are scatred abroad: make me y floures grene agayne, y are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shut vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who may knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge with mē? As for me, I am vn wise: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou axest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges y I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde o LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyll lycken my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered ¶ sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

¶ Then answered he me and sayde: The creature may not haist aboue the maker, nether maye the worlde holde the at once, that shalbe created.

¶ And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruaut, that thou luyng maker hast made the creature luyng at once, ¶ the creature bare it? euē so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childesbed of a womā, and saye vnto her: Yf thou bringest forth childrē, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therefore, to bryng forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

¶ Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childesbed vnto the earth, for those that haue not tasted death for their byrth and the hart of the indwellers shalbe changed, and turned in to another mesnyng: for euell shalbe put out, and deccate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal flourish, corruption shalbe overcome: and the truth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

And it happened when he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpo him, before who I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe þy, this tyme of þy night for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seven dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is heerde before the Highest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous desaynye, he hath sene also thy chastite, which thou hast had ouer sence thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe thee all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haue not with þy tymes that are past to thycke sayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, þy I awoke agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hart vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Highest: for my sperte was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (when the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sperte, and the darknesses were yet on euery syde, and silence: there was no man's voyce as yet from this. Then commaundedst thou a layre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

Vpon the seconde daye thou maydest the sperte of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deepene betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remaine aboue, and the other beneath. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughdest in passe, þy the waters were gathered in the seventh parte of the earth: these partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent þy men might sowe and occupie husbandrie therein. As sene as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediately there was growen innumerable frute, & many diuerse pleasures & desayres of temptation, flowers of changeable colour and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the sonne shoulde geue his shyne, and þy Moone his light: the starres diddest thou sett in order, and gauest them a charge, to do eueryce euen vnto man,² that was for to be made. Vpo the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seventh parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shoulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the deuine water and without seede, brought forth byrnyng beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might praye thy wonderous workes. Then diddest thou prouide two scales, þy one thou calledst Enoch and the other Lemathan, and diddest separate the one from the other: for the seventh parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dryed vp the thirde daye, that he shoulde dwell in the same parte, where are a thousande hilles. But vnto Lemathan thou gauest the seventh parte, namely the moor, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wilt, and when.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest commaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shoulde bringe forth beastes, caten, and all þy creepes, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest make of all thy creature. Of him came so all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this hast I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for mannes sake. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be men a spelle, and hast increased the abundances of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rube of the house.

And now (O LORDE), the Heiue which haue euere bene reputed as nothinge, haue begunne to be heerde and se, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called þy first borne, thy only begotten, and thy first borne house) are growen in to tender herbes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for mannes sake, why haue we not the inheritance in that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordered the worlde which I made.

And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geuē me a waye, I wyl speake before ꝑ: for oure mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherefore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but less of stature? And she shal answer the: They ꝑ be borne in the youth of strēgth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the child-eszbed fayleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauant, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The vi. Chapter.

AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the ground was made, before the worlde stode, or euer ꝑ wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were established, before ꝑ innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer ꝑ highnesses of ꝑ ayre were lifted vp, afore ꝑ measures of the firmament were named, or euer ꝑ chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them ꝑ now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cōsidre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shalbe the partyng asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Iacob & Esau were borne of him, Iacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Iacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) axe thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruauant the ende of thy tokē, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but ꝑ place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therefore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of ꝑ earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce ꝑ spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, ꝑ dayes come, ꝑ I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpō earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisition of them, what they be ꝑ haue hurte equitye with vnrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfilled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, & the children of a yere olde shal speake with their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: & sodely shal the sowne places appeare as the vsowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frendes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not taisted death frō their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned in to another meanyng: for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal florish, corrupcion shalbe ouercome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

¶ And it happened whan he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe ŷ, the tyme of ŷ night for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seuē dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hyst: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealyng, he hath sene also thy chastite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with ŷ tymes that are past to thynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, ŷ I wepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Hyst: for my sprete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnynge (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let^a heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sprete, and the darcknesses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

¶ Vpon the seconde daye thou maydest the sprete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuysion betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remaine aboue, and the other beneth. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, ŷ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intēt ŷ men might sowe and occupie huszbandrie therin. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of temptacion, floures of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou cōmaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and ŷ Moone hir light: the starres didest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man,^b that was for to be made. Vpō the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domme water and without soule, brought forth lyuyng beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, ŷ one thou caldest Enoch and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathā thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wylt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest cōmaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shulde brynge forth beastes, catell and all ŷ crepe, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy creatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast lickened the abundaice of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rofe of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the Heithē which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begōne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called ŷ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritance in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The vii. Chapter.

AND it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. Thē sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, y^e it might be depe and greate: but the intraunce is narow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? Yf he wente not thorow the narow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intraunce is narow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixte thē both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this cite now were geuen to an heyre, & he neuer wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritaunce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & whan Adam trāsgressed my statutes, then was y^e thinge iudged that was done. Then were y^e intraunces of the worlde made narow, full of sorow and trauayle: They are but few & euell, full of paret and laboure. For the intraunces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

B Yf they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and wayne thinges, moch lesse maye they cōprehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mā? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thē sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordened in thy lawe, that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Neuer-theless the righteous shall suffre straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue lyued vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboute God, and none that hath vnderstondinge aboute the Hyest. For there be many y^e perish, because they despyse y^e lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundement to such as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined wayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despyed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinaunces haue they not bene faithfull & stedfast, and haue not performed his workes.

And therefore Esdras, vnto the full, plenty: C and to the empyte, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, y^e these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shall appeare: & the earth y^e now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & who so euer is deliuered from y^e foresayde euels, shal se my wōders. For my sonne Iesus shal be openly declared, with those y^e be with him: and they y^e remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that haue life: and y^e worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seuē dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylce, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them. And y^e most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lōge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, y^e trueth shal remayne, and faith shal waxe strōge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousnesses shall watch, and the vnrighteousneses shall beare no rule.

En Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites,^a & Moses for the fathers y synned in the wyldernes, & he y came after him for Israel, in y tyme of Ahas and Samuel: and David for y destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, & Helias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for y people in the tyme of Senacherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Euē so now, seynge y corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherefore shal it not be so now also?

En He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not y ende, there remaineth moch honoure in it, therefore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and y begynnynge of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowsed, all myszbeleue taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to saue him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him y hath gottē y victory. I answered the, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: y it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els when it was geuē him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heuynes, & after death to loke for punysment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou y synned, thou art not fallē alone, but we all y come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortal tyme, where as we meddle with deadly workes? & that there is promysed vs an euerlasting hope, where as we oure selues are euell and vayne? & yf there are layed vp for vs dwellynges of health & fredome, where as we haue lyued euell? and that the worships of y Hiest is keppe to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in y most wicked wayes of all? and that there shalbe shewed a paradise, whose frute endureth for euer, wherein is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in? for we haue walked in vnpleasaut places: And that the faces of them which haue absteyned, shal shyne aboute the starres, where as oure faces shalbe blacke and darcke? For whyle we lyued and dyd vn-righteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death?

F The answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion & thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life,^e that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then & sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the Hiest is mercyfull, in y he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe:^e and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberall to geue where as it requyeth: and that he is of greате mercy, for he multiplieth his lounge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made luyunge, with those that dwell therein: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made luyunge. And yf the iudge forgauē not those y be healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye y multitude that stryue, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The viij. Chapter.

AND he answered me, sayge: The most hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a symilitude, Eszdras: As whan thou axest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it y golde cometh of.

^c Rom. 2. a.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created,^a but few shall be preserued. Then answered I & sayde: Then swalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruauent leue, & we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sede vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that euery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childesbed, and thou guest the membres, and thy creature is preserued in fyre and water: & ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it & is preserued, shal both be kepte together: & whan tyme is, the childesbedd delyuereth & thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

B For thou hast commaunded the brestes to geue mylke vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nuturest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which with so greate labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritaunce, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Iacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

^a Mat. 20. b. and 21. b.

This is the begynnyng of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerlastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is exceeding hye, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehended, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with tremblinge, whose keepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynauce is fearfull, whose loke dryeth vp the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, & whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare & prayer of thy seruauent, and marck with thine eares the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as I haue vnderstandinge, I will answer. O loke not vpō the synnes of thy people, which serue & in the trueth. Haue no respecte vnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in & righteousnes and glory; for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

D For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for & righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generation, that thou shuldest be so rough towardes him?

^b For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousnes & thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

^b 3 Re. 8. g. 2 Par. 6. f. 1 Ioh. 1. b.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and according vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destruccio, "but I wyll reioyce ouer the worke and thought of ⁊ righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgrimage, the holymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the huszbād man soweth moch sede vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plāted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then ⁊ sayde: Yf I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbāde mans sede periseth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Euen so periseth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and likened him vnto the huszbande mans sede. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritaunce: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for such as be to come. For thou wātest yet moch, seynge thou mayest loue my creature aboute me: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art maruelous before the Hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, ⁊ thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in ⁊ worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for soch as be like the: for vnto you is paradyse opened, the tre of life is plāted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wysdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, ⁊ into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulness. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortalite. And therefore axe thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despyed the Hyest, thought scorn of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Morouer, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Euē so is thyrst and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnthankfull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therefore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to soch as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORDE, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The ii. Chapter.

HE answered me then and sayde: Measure thou the tyme diligently in it self, whan thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde ⁊ before: so shalt thou vnderstonde, that it is the very same tyme, wherin the Hyest wil begynne to vysit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and vproure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstonde, that the most hyest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnyng.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnyng and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tymes also of the Hyest haue playne begynnynges in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And euery one that shalbe sauēd, and shall be able to escape by his workes ⁊ by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserued from the saide pears, and shal se my sauoure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytfully, shall dwell in paynes.

* Gen. 4. a.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open rowme of amendenēt and conuersion, ⁊ vnderstode not, but despyed it: ⁊ same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, ⁊ how the righteous shalbe sauēd, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: "I haue talked before ⁊ now I speake, and wyl speake also hereafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be sauēd, like as the floude is greater then the droppe.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also ⁊ worke: and as the huszband man is himself, so is his huszbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwel, then was there no man that withstode me.

C Now whan euery one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of ⁊ thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared thē greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish thē, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape ⁊ wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate labour haue I made it vp.

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to ⁊ felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hyst continually, so will I come, and talke with the.

B So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge ⁊ floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and ⁊ meate of the same satisfied me. After seuen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, ⁊ my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hyst, and saide: O LORDE, thou ⁊ shewest thy self vnto vs, ⁊ thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayēge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou sede of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, ⁊ ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, ⁊ the frute of ⁊ lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, ⁊ because they kepte not ⁊ thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receaueth E sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe ⁊ are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we ⁊ haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaued the lawe: notwithstandinge ^d the lawe perisheth not, but remayneth in his labour.

And whan I considered these thinges in my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me with myne eyes, and vpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, ⁊ she had aszshes vpon hir heade.

F Thē let I my thoughtes go, ⁊ I was in, ⁊ turned me vnto her, ⁊ sayde: wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory ⁊ discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewaile myself ⁊ take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, ⁊ brought very lowe. And I said vnto her: what ayleth ⁊? Or who hath done eny thinge to ⁊? tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huszband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night all houres, but make my prayer to \S Hyest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, looked vpon my misery, considered my trouble, and gaue me a sonne, and I was glad of him, so was my husbād also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greate honour vnto \S Mightie. And I norished him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp, τ came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The r. Chapter.

AND it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: thē ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to cōforte me. Thē toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: τ whan they had all rested, \S they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heynes and mournynge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion oure mother is all wofull and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heynes, τ make oure mone (for we be all soroufull.) As for the heynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnyng all men are borne of her, τ other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all in to destruction, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournynge, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournynge is not like the mournynge of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heynes: as for the earth, according to the ordynance of \S earth onely, so that many are gone away in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle τ sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnyng geueth hir frute vnto man, for him \S made her. And therefore witholde thy sorowe and heynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto \S , beare it strōgly. For yf thou iudgeth the marck τ ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counsell in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbāde.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyl I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I comoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be cōceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waiste, oure aluter broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankesgeuyng put to sylence, oure myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candlestick is quenched, \S Arke of the couenant is takē from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Leuites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childrē destroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is \S greatest of all) is lowsed vp from hir worshipe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therefore shake of \S greate heynes, and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the Hyest maye geue the rest from \S laboure and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkynge with her, hir face dyd shyne τ glyster, so that I was afraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediately she cast out a greate voyce, very fearfull, so that \S earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I looked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundation.

Then was I afraied, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vriel the angell, \S which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many considerations and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakynge these wordes, he came vnto me, and loked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done acordynge vnto thy wordes,^a I wente in to the felde, and there haue I sene thinges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stöde vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake on to me my LORDE, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my vnderstondynge be disceaued, and my mynde? But now I beseke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauent of this wöder. He answered me thē and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afraied, for the Hiest hath opened many secrete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greate lamentacion for Sion: and therefore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mournyng, and thou hast comforted her: Neuertheles now seist thou the licknes of the woman no more, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer: The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeaeres vnfrutefull and baren, those are the xxx. yeaeres, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeaeres Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she norished him with laboure, that was the dwellynge of Ierusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Ierusalem. And thou sawest hir lickenesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed y.

And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from y hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir cleannesse, and the fayrnes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I bad the remayne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knew y the Hiest wolde shew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go in to the felde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hiest wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afraied, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehendē. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Hiest, as y few. But tomorrow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shal the Hiest shewe the visions of hie thinges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he cōmaunded me.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew with his wynges, and rained vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y all thinges vnder heauen were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no not one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gaue a sounde with his fethers, & a voyce sayge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, y the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cōtrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, ¶ when it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, & raigned, & had a greate tyme: & it happened, ¶ when it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & sayde: Heare thou ¶ hast kepte in the earth so lōge, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after ¶ atteyne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, & raigned as the other afore, & appeared nomore also. So wēte it with all the residue one after another, so ¶ euery one raigned, & thē appeared nomore. Thē I loked, & beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers ¶ folowed were set vp vpō the right syde, ¶ they might rule also: and some of thē ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of thē were set vp, but ruled not. After this I loked, & beholde, ¶ xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, & sixe fethers. Then sawe I also, ¶ the sixe fethers were parted in two, & remayned vnder the heade, ¶ was vpon the right syde, for the foure cōtynued in their place. So I loked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by thē selues to raigne: & whā they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them ¶ were by him, & ate vp ¶ two vnder wynges, ¶ wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put ¶ whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those ¶ dwelt vpon earth with moch labour, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the foules that haue bene. After this I loked, and beholde, the heade that was in the myddest, sodenly appeared nomore, like as ¶ wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer those that dwelt therein. And I behelde, & lo, the heade vpon the right side, deuoured it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: loke before the, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng haistly out of ¶ wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: Heare thou, I wyl talke with the, and the Hyest shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that ¶ ende of their times might come thorow thē?

And the fourth came, and ouerwanne all ¶ the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulnes, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth with the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, & the earth hast thou iudged not with trueth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyete, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwelllynges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as dyd the no harme. Therefore is thy wrongeous dealyng and blasphemy come vp vnto the Hyest, and thy pryde vnto the Mightie. The Hyest also hath loked vpō the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therfore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngracious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, when she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for ¶ iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The xij. Chapter.

AND it happened whā ¶ Lyō spake these ¶ wordes vnto ¶ Aegle, * ¶ heade ¶ afore had ¶ vpperhāde, appeared nomore: nether dyd ¶ foure wynges appeare eny more, ¶ came to hi, & were sett vp to raigne, & their kyngdome was small & full of vproure.

And I sawe, & beholde, they appeared nomore, & ¶ whole body of ¶ Aegle was brēt, & the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked I out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde vnto my sprete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in ¶ thou searchest

* Rede, I sawe, and beholde, out the wayes of the Hyest: lo, yet am I weery in my minde, and very weake in my sprete, and litle strēth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this night. Therefore wil I now beseke the Hyest, \hat{y} he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, α I sayde: B LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with \hat{y} before many other, α yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, cōforte me then, and shew me thy seruauant the interpretacion α playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly cōforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shew me \hat{y} last of tymes.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretacion of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kingdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother "Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpō earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes \hat{y} were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme thē the other, α this do \hat{y} xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from \hat{y} body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greate stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, bot shal be set in to his begynnyng. And \hat{y} eight vnderwynges which thou sawest hāge vnto \hat{y} wynges of hī, betokē, \hat{y} in hī there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shalbe but small, α their yeares swift, α two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme commeth, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto \hat{y} ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades restinge, this is the interpretation: In his last shal the Hyest rayse vp thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to the, α they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therin, with moch laboure aboue all those \hat{y} were before thē. Therefore are they called \hat{y} heades of the Aegle: for it is they \hat{y} shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, α \hat{y} shal perfourme α fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that \hat{y} greate heade appeared no more, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpō his bed, α yet with payne, for the two that remayne, shalbe slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

And where as thou sawest two vnderwinges vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, whō the Hyest hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, α full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wodd and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukynge him for his vnrighteousnesse, is the wynde, which the Hyest hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them lyuynge before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he delyuer with trouble, those \hat{y} be preserued ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnyng. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secrete of the Hyest.

Therefore wryte all these thinges \hat{y} thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehendē and kepe these secretes. But wayte thou here \hat{y} self yet seuen dayes moo, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the Hyest to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaued, \hat{y} the seuen dayes were past, α I not come agayne into \hat{y} cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, α came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, \hat{y} thou forsakest vs, α systter here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an hauen α shippe preserued from \hat{y} tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they \hat{y} dyed there:

and they wepte with loude voyce. Then answered I the α sayde: Be of good cōforte O Israel, α be not heuy thou house of Iacob: for γ Hyest hath you in remēbraūce, α γ Mightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of γ myserie of Israel, that I might seke mercy for γ lowe estate of youre Sāctuary. And now go youre waye home euery mā, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wētē their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seuen dayes, as γ angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND it happened after the seuē dayes, γ I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to cōsider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, α beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mē out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst γ man, that came out from γ see. And I loked, α beholde, he graued himself a greate mōutayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, α I coude not.

I sawe after these, γ all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afrayed, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapen: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes γ wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flāmes, and γ greate storme, α fell with a russhe vpon γ people, which was prepared to fight α brēt thē vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust α smoke. Whan I saw this, I was afrayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come B downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed γ seruauant all γ wōders frō γ begynnynge, α hast counted me worthy, γ thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretacon of this dreame. For thus I cōsidre in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, α moch more wo vnto thē that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstonde I γ thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therfore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, γ he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se γ thinges γ shal happen in γ last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shall I shewe the, and I wyl open vnto the, the thinge γ thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes α faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therfore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man comynge vp from the depe of the see, γ same is he whom God the Hyest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall delyuer his creature, α he shal orde thē that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, γ out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre and storme, α how γ he lift vp nether swerde ner weapen, but γ the russzshinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, γ came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyl delyuer thē γ are vpon earth, α in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thē, γ dwell in the earth. And one shal vndertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, ¶ one realme agaynst another. When this commeth to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my sonne be declared, whō thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And whan all ¶ people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, ¶ they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stōde vpon the toppes of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shall come, ¶ shall be shewed, beyng prepared ¶ buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny hādes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people ¶ are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are likened vnto the flamme: and without eny laboure shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cōpared vnto the fyre.

¶ And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hī: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye prisoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom ¶ Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer ¶ water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gaue them this counsell, ¶ they shulde leaue the multitude of the Heithē, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and ¶ God shewed tokens for thē, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeaere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, ¶ Hyest shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal dēfede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, ¶ shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cāst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so māiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therefore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. ¶ Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therefore haue I shewed the ¶ treasure of the Hyest. After three dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to ¶ felde, geuyng prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and soch as is in tyme, and there I satt three dayes.

The viiij. Chapter.

VPON the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce vnto me out of the bush, ¶ sayde: Esdras, Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. Thē spake he vnto me: ¶ In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses, ¶ talked with him, whā my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, ¶ brought him vpō ¶ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him ¶ secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge: These wordes shalt thou declare, ¶ not hyde thē. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shal be turned and remayne with my counsell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll ¶ tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remaineth there that, which is after $\frac{1}{2}$ half of $\frac{1}{2}$ tenth parte.

^a Mat. 24. a. ^b 4 Re. 17. a. ^c Exo. 14. c. Iosu. 3. d.

B Therefore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruction: let go from the mortall thoughtes: cast awaye the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place $\frac{1}{2}$ thoughtes that are most heuy vnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for soch euell & wickednesse as thou hast now sene happē, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal synne and wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the trueth is fled farre awaye, & lesynge is hard at hande. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

C Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they $\frac{1}{2}$ shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke the? Thus the worlde is set in darknes, and they $\frac{1}{2}$ dwel therein, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Yf I haue foude grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sene the begynnynge, which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, may lyue.

And he answered me, sayge: Go $\frac{1}{2}$ waye, gather thy people together, & saye vnto the, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many boxe trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be performed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto $\frac{1}{2}$ wyse. Tomorrow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

D Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all $\frac{1}{2}$ people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnynge were straungers in Egipte, from whēce they were delyuered, and receaued the lawe of life, ⁶ which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But youre fathers and ye youre selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, & haue not kepte the wayes which the Hyest cōmaūded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that he had geuen you. And now are ye here and youre brethren amōge you. Therefore yf so be that ye wil subdue youre owne vnderstandinge, and reforme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliue, & after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shal the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and $\frac{1}{2}$ names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

E So I toke the fyue men (as he commaūded me) and we wente in to the felde, and remainned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayge: ⁶ Esdras, Open thy mouth, & drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, & beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colour of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstōdinge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my sprete was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut no more. The Hyest gaue vnderstōdinge vnto the fyue men, $\frac{1}{2}$ they wrote $\frac{1}{2}$ hye thiges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth & foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the Hyest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytte, speake openly, $\frac{1}{2}$ the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe $\frac{1}{2}$ lxx. last, $\frac{1}{2}$ thou mayest shew it onely to soch as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The xv. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, speake thou in the eares of A my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in ꝑ mouth, saieth the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the trueth. Feare not the ymaginaciōs against ꝑ, let not ꝑ vnfaithfulness of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulness. Beholde saieth the LORDE, I wil brynge plagues vpon the worlde: ꝑ swerde, hunger, death and destrucciō, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all ꝑ earth, and their shameful workes are fulfilled.

^a Mat. 24. a. 1 Joh. 2. c.

^b Deut. 4. 5.

^c Eze. 3. a. Apo. 10. b.

B Therefore saieth the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therefore (saieth the LORDE) I wil surely auge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt bloude from amonge them.

^a Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plagues as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundations of it shalbe smytten with the plague and punyshment, ꝑ God shal brynge vpon it.

C They that tyll ꝑ grounde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Wo worth ꝑ worlde and them that dwell therin, for ꝑ swerde & their destrucciō draweth nye: & one people shal stōde vp to fight against another, & swerdes in their hādes. For mē shalbe vnstedfast, and some shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, & shal not be able. For because of their pryde ꝑ cities shalbe brought in feare, ꝑ houses shal shake, and men shalbe afraied. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neyghboure, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bred, and because of the greate trouble.

D Beholde, I gather & call together all the kynges of ꝑ earth which are from the vprysinge, from the south, from the east and Liba-nus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geuē them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense thē in their bosome. Thus sayeth ꝑ LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare ꝑ synners, and my swerde shal not cease ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundations of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saieth the LORDE. I wil not spare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that synne agaynst him, and therefore delyuereth hē them vnto death and destrucciō: For now are the plagues come vpon the worlde, & ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not delyuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

E Beholde, an horrible vision commeth frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpō earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afraied: and as the wyld bores out of ꝑ wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with thē, and shal waist the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembringe their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afraied, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besege thē, and consume one of thē, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

F Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at ꝑ greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke of mā vnto ꝑ Camels lytter: And there shalbe greate fearfulness and tremblinge vpō earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afraied, and a tremblinge shal come vpon them.

^b Psal. 43. c. Rom. 8. c. 1 Co. 4. b.

And then shal there come greate raynes from ſouth and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal shutt them vp agayne, & the cloude which he rayned vp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare toward ſouth east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, & the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and ſightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afraied and the ſun dwell therein, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: ſunne all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, & they shal breake downe the cities & wallis, mountaynes & hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afraied, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia ſunne confortest thyself also vpon the hope of Babilon, and art a worshipec of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, & hast dete ſunne daughters in whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to comytte whordome with the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inuencions.

Therefore sayeth God: I wyl sende plagues vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, hogger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruction and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dried vp as a floure, when ſunne heate aryseth ſunne is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sick as a poore wife that is plagued & beate of wemen: so ſunne the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saith the LORDE? Yf thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, when thou wast dronke: set forth the bewtye of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therefore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

* Some rede, no rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vnto the, and shal deluyre the in to the plague. Thy childre shal dye of hunger, & thou shalt fall thorow ſunne swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, & all thine shal perish with the swerde in ſunne felde. They ſunne be in ſunne mountaynes shal dye of hunger, & eate their owne flesh, & drinke their owne bloude for very hogger of bred and thyrst of water. Thou unhappie shalt come thorow the see, & receaue plagis agayne.

In the passage they shal caste downe the slayne cite, & shal rote out one parte of ſunne lond, & consume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stuble, & they shalbe thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy lond, thy wod and thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the bewtie of thy face.

The xvi. Chapter.

WO vnto the Babilon & Asia, wo vnto ſunne Egypte & Syria: gyrd your selues with clothes of sack & hayre, and mourne for your childre, be sory, for your destruction is at hande. A swerde is sent vpon you, & who wil turne it back? A fyre is kyndled amonge you, & who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, & what is he that wyl dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hogger lyon in the wod? Or maye eny man quench the fyre in the stubble, when it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, ſunne is shot of a stronge archer? The mightie LORDE sendeth the plagis, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled & gone forth in his wrath, and what is he that wil quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, and who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afraied? The LORDE shal threaten, and who shal not vtterly be beaten to powder at his presence? The earth quaketh, & the foundacions therof: ſunne see aryseth up with waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are vnquyte, & the fishes therof also before the LORDE, & before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arrowes that he shuteth, are sharpe, & shall not mysse, when they begynne to be shot in to ſunne endes of the worlde.

B Beholde, f plagis are sent, t shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, t shall not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, euen so f plagis f shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl delyuer me in those dayes? The begynnynge of sorowes t greate mourninge: the begynnynge of derth t greate death: the begynnynge of warres, t the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnynge of euels, t they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plagis come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble t anguysch are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndeful of f scourges.

C Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, f they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe vpō earth, warres, derth t greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpō earth shall perish of hōger, t the other that escape the hunger, shal the swerde destroye: t the deed shalbe cast out as donge, t there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For f earth shalbe waisted, t the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll f earth t to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, t who shal plucke thē of t gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, t who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, t two in the felde, which shall hyde thē selues in the thicke buszshes, t in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remaine thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly sought thorow the vynyarde.

D Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for thē f search their houses with the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, t the feldes therof shall waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauallye there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the women shal make lamentacion, hauynge no huszbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed, t their huszbandes shal perish of hunger. O ye seruantes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, t marck thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: beholde, the plagis drawe nye, t are not slack in tarienge. Like as a traauylinge woman, which after f ix. moneth brighet forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes come vpō hir body, t whan the childe cōmeth to the byrth, they tary not the twyncklynge of an eye: Euē so shall not f plagis be slack to come vpon earth, t the worlde shal mourne, t sorowes shal come vpō it on euery syde.

O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll: t in all euell be euen as pylgremes vpon earth. He f selleteh, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: t he f byeth, as one that wil lese." Who so occupieth marchaūdies, as he that wyneeth not: t he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therin: he that soweth, as one f shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shal get no children: and they f mary not, as the wyddowes: t therfore they f laboure, laboure in vayne. For straungers shall reape their frutes, t spoyle their goodes, ouer throwe their houses, t take their childre captiue, for in captiuyte t hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies with robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possessions t personnes? the more wil I punysh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decketh hir self, and shall accuse her to hir face, whan he cōmeth that defendeth, which shal make inquisicio for all synne vpō earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God t his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all f workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes t their heres. For he spake but the worde:^a let the earth be made, & it was made: let the heaue be made, and it was made. In his worde were y starres made, & he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, & the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, and what it conteyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and with his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowte, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpō the toppe of the mountaynes, y the floudes might poure downe from y stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of y body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the sprete of y Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

Ⓢ He knoweth youre ymaginacions & inuēcions, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, & wolde hyde youre synnes. Therefore hath y LORDE searched and sought out all youre workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan youre synnes are brought forth, ye shalbe ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shalbe youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? Or how will ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from youre synnes, and forget youre vnrighteousnesses, and medle nomore with them: so shal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greate multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydle with Idols: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, & trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate insurreccion vpon those that feare y LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shall spare no man: they shall spoyle and waist soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shall they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shall it be knowne who are my chosen, & they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saieth the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the same. Be not ye afraied, dispayre not, for God is youre captayne.

Who so kepeth my cōmaundementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, & let not youre vnrighteousnesses be lift vp. Wo be vnto thē that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednesses: like as a felde is hedged in with buszshes, and the path therof couered with thornes, y no man maye trauayle thorow: and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

The ende of the fourth booke of Esdras.

The boke of Tobias.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Of the kynred, life and godly conuersacion of Tobias.

Chap. II.

The lounge compassion that Tobias sheweth in buryge the deed, for the which cause he is hated and persecuted. God nurtoureth him with blyndnes. His wyfe casteth him in the teth.

Chap. III.

Tobias prayeth hertely vnto God, for the trouble and captiuyte of him self and the people. Of Sara the daughter of Raguel.

Chap. IIII.

Tobias teacheth his sonne in the feare of God.

Chap. V.

The sonne obeyeth the father, and goeth his earade. God prouydeth mercifully for him, and sendeth his angell to be his gyde.

Chap. VI.

In their journey they take a fish, wherof the angell commaundeth him to kepe the hert, the gall and the leuer, and telleth him wherto it is good.

Chap. VII.

They come to Raguel, which receaueth them lounyngly, and marieth his daughter Sara vnto Tobias.

Chap. VIII.

Tobias goinge to bed with his wife, ordreth him self as the angell bad him, and so both he and his wyfe are preserued from euell.

Chap. IX.

Tobias sendeth the angell vnto Gabelus for the money.

Chap. X.

Tobias father and mother lōge sore for his comynge: And Raguel seyng that he can kepe him no longer, sendeth him awaie with his wife.

Chap. XI.

They returne home, and are welcommed ioyfully. Olde Tobias hath his sight agayne. They reioyse altogether, and geue thākes vnto God.

Chap. XII.

The father and the sonne wolde fayne rewarde the angell. He wil haue nothinge: but sheweth them what he is.

Chap. XIII.

Tobias the elder prayseth God, & exorteth other mē, to be thankfull vnto him.

Chap. XIII.

Tobias beyng now olde, prophecieth the destruction of Niniue, and the prosperous health of Israel. The sonne forsaketh the sinfull cite, as his father bad him, & goeth to his father in lawe.

all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childeshly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to the goldē calues, which ^ateroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Ierusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped [¶] LORDE God of Israel, ^afaithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he accordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge.

B But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe^e a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuite vnto Ninieue, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the Héithē, he ^ekeptē his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so much as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure^e in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

C So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in preson,^a and comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauynge ^{*}ten talētes of syluer (of [¶] thinges wherwith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwritynge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of thē, as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

D And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Iewry,^e (what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) [¶] in his wrath slew many of the children of Israel, Tobias buried their bodies.^b But whan it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne [¶] with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these thinges vpon a solempne ^a daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, [¶] sayde vnto his sonne: Go [¶] waye [¶] bryngē hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him [¶] bare him preuely in to his house, [¶] whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembrynge [¶] wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: 'youre hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuynes.

But whan [¶] Sonne was downe, he wente his waye [¶] buried him. Then all his neighbours reproved him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the^e because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and buriest thou the deed againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, [¶] buried them at mydnight.

C It happened vpō a daye, that he had buried [¶] deed, [¶] was weery, came home, [¶] layed him downe by the wall [¶] slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so [¶] he was blynde. ^aThis tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Iob. For in so moch as he euer feared God from his youth vp, [¶] kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy against God, that the plague of blyndnes chaused vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

¶ For like as blessed Iob was had in derision of kynges, euen so was he laughed to scorne of his elders & kynsfolkes, which sayde vnto him: "where is thy hope, for [¶] which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked the, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men," [¶] & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weeuynge worke, & loke what luyng she coude get with the laboure of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened [¶] she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir huszband herd it crie, he sayde: loke [¶] it be not stollen,^a restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not lauffull for vs, to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: "Now is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & such like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ THEN Tobias toke it heuely, & with teares beganne to make his prayer, sayge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all [¶] wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt.^f And now O LORDE be myndefull of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my myszdedes ner [¶] myszdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto [¶] cōmaundemētes, therefore are we spoyled, brought in to captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scatred vs. And now O LORDE, [¶] iudg-mentes are greate, for we haue not done acordinge to [¶] cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked innocētly before [¶]. And now O LORDE, deale with me acordinge to thy wil, & cōmaunde my sprete to be receaued in peace, for more expediēt were it for me to dye, thē to lyue.

¶ At the same tyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of [¶] Medes was slaundred of one of hir fathers handmaydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seuen huszbandes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto hir, were slayne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therefore whan she reproued the mayden for hir faute, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy huszbandes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wēte Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drāke, but cōtynued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.

¶ Vpon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayseed the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of oure fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeust the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp myne eyes. I beseke [¶] O LORDE, lowse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me vtterly awaye frō of [¶] earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in sporte, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behaouore. Neuertheles an huszbande haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

¶ Now peradventure either I haue bene vnworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to another huszband. For why? [¶] thy counsell is not in [¶] power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal delyuer him: and yf his life be in chastenyng, that he shall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

¶ For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnacion: & why? after a storme thou makest [¶] wether fayre and still: after wepinge and heuynes thou geuest greate ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayseed for euer. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in the sight of the magesty of the Hyst God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was sent to helpe the both, whose prayers came together before God.

The iiii. Chapter.

A SO whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye thē in thine hert as a foundation. When God taketh away my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mother in honour all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greate pears she suffred for f̄ in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, lest at any tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundemētes of the LORDE oure God.

B Geue allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned away from the. Be mercifull after f̄ power. Yf thou hast moche, geue plēteously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For allmes delyuereth *frō death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darknes. A greate comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

My sonne, kepe the well from all whor-dome, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde beganne all destruccion.

C Who so euer worketh any thinge for the, immediatly geue him his hyre, and loke that thy hyred seruaunte wagies remayne not by the ouer night. Loke that thou neuer do vnto another man, the thinge that thou woldest not another mā shulde do vnto the. Eate thy bred with the hongrie and poore, and couer the naked with thy clothes. Set thy bred and wyne vpon the buryall of the righteous, and do not thou eate and drynke therof with the synners. Axe euer counsell at f̄ wyse.

Be allwaye thankfull vnto God, and beseke him, that he will ordre thy wayes, & that what so euer thou deuysest or takest in hande, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the also my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a bab) ^aI delyuered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwritinge haue I by me. And therefore seke some meanes, how thou mayest come by him, & receaue of him f̄ sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwritynge agayne.

My sonne, be not afrayed: trueth it is, we lede here a poore life: ^abut greate good shall we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well.

The v. Chapter.

THEN answered Tobias his father, & A sayde: father, all that thou hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with f̄ for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue f̄ money, whyle I am yet luyng.

Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete B he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of f̄ Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwellecth in Rages a cite of f̄ Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egbathanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wete Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At f̄ which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

Now whan the angell came in, he saluted C him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Axest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye ſ, be not displeased, that I desyred to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, ſ they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: "The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. Yf we had bene content with oure pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe oure sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that ſ good angell of God shal beare him cōpany, and ordre well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of frō wepyng, & helde hir tonge.

The vi. Chapter.

SO Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and ſ first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afraied, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he commeth vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheke blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpō the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

The sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for medicyne. Tobias dyd so, and rosted the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as much as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye ſ brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: Yf thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all maner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth ſ same shall come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte to or strake ſ eyes withall, where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belōgeth vnto the, and thou must mary his daughter: and therefore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seuen huszbandes, and they all are deed: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afraied therefore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge thē in their age with sorow to their graues.

Then sayde ſ angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashiō, that they shut God out from thē and from their hert, and ^ageue them selues to their owne lust, euen as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon soch hath ^fdeuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, witholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but ^avnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shalbe dryuē awaye. The secōde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shalbe borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for eny fleshly lust: that in the sede of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel loked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Nephtali, out of the captiuyte of Niniue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moch good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mā's father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kyssed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now whā they had talked together, Raguel had kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed thē to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my petition, & promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seuen men, that wēte in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue

the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belōgeth thy daughter to wife, therfore might none other haue her.

THē sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be maried in hir owne kynred, acordinge to the lawe of Moses.^d And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hāde of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abrahā, the God of Isaac and the God of Iacob be with you, ioynē you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wrytinge of the mariage. And then made they mery, and praysed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of goode cheare my daughter, the LORDE of heauen geue the ioye, for the heynessee that thou hast suffred.

The viij. Chapter.

NOW after ^y they had supped, they brought the yōge man in to her. Thē thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. Thē spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure ^aprayer vnto God to daye, tomorow, and ouermorow: for these thre nightes wil we reconcyte oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioynē together in ^y deuteye of mariage. For we are the children of holy men, and we maye not come together as the Heithen, ^y knowe not God.

Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, ^y he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of oure fathers, praysed be thou of heauē & earth of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam^f of the moulde of the earth, & gauest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruantes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduēture, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydēs, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydinges. D Then Raguel and Anna his wife prayed y LORDE, and sayde: Praysed be thou O LORDE God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put away from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, y thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruantes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to soch as wente by y waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two wekes. As for all the good y he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made his wrytinge, that the half which remayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The ix. Chapter.

A THEN Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: Yf I shulde geue myself to be y seruant, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruantes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my mariage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father tellethe y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruantes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytinge, & receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thiges had happened, & caused him to come with him to y mariage. Now whan he came B in to the house of Raguel, he foude Tobias syttinge at y table: & he leape vp, & they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayed God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right verteous & iust man, & of one y feareth God, & geueth greate almes. And blessinge haue y wife, and youre elders, that ye maye se youre children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre sede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the mariage.

The x. Chapter.

NOW whyle yōge Tobias made lōge A tariance by reason of y mariage, his father was full of care and heuynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne tarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peraduenture Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begāne he to be very soroufull, he & Anna his wife with him, & beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appointt. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge countre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, *thou hope of oure generation? Seinge all þ̄ thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man þ̄ we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmyng afaire of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne ī lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messaūger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him þ̄ thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias with many wordes, & he wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, & the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydēs, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe & sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir huszbande, to rule well hir huszsholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The xi. Chapter.

A NOW as they were goinge homewarde againe, vpon þ̄ xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye towarde Ninieue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therfore yf it please the, we two wyll go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and þ̄ catell come soft & fairly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon þ̄ toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

B And whyle she was waytinge there for his cōmyng, she looked afaire of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir huszbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth: And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thanks vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, & strake his eyēs ouer with the gall of þ̄ fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messaūger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

C So þ̄ blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruauant his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped & thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried half an houre, and then beganne the blemysh to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte szkynne of an egg: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

D Then they prayed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thanks, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all þ̄ husholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, & reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for þ̄ space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

The xii. Chapter.

A THE Tobias called his sonne vnto him ⁊ sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the euell sprete from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to hir father and mother: he delyuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him,
 toke him asyde, and beganne to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them:
 Praise y God of heauen, and geue thanks vnto him before all men luyunge, for he hath shewed his mercy * vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secrete, but to shew and to prayse y workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fasting, and to geue almes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. ^a For almes delyuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euerlastinge life, But they that do synne and vnrighteousnes, are y enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherefore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. ^b Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and lefdest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. ^c And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the,
 and to delyuer Sara y sonnes wife from the euell sprete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seuen that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afayed,

* Some rede, vnto you.

and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces
 vnto the grounde. Then sayde the angell:
 Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene with you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thanks vnto him.

^d You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therefore is y tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his won-derous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes,
 he was taken awaye out of their sight, so y
 they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wōderous workes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THEn olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde:
 Greate art thou o LORDE for euermore, and thy kyngdome worlde without ende: for ^e thou scourgest and healest, thou ledest vnto hell, and bryngest out agayne, and there is none y maye escape thy hande. O geue thanks vnto y LORDE ye children of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the Heithē.
 For amonge the Heithen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intēt that ye shulde shew forth his maruelous workes: ⁊ cause them to knowe, that there is none other God almighty but he. He hath chastened vs for oure myszdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considere then, how he hath dealt with you, ⁊ prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge kyng in youre workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therefore O ye synners, and do righteousnes before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me ⁊ my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. ^f O Ierusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, ⁊

geue thanks to the euerlastinge God, that he maye builde vp his tabernacle agayne in f , that he maye call agayne vnto the, all soch as be in captiuyte, and that thou mayest haue ioye for euermore. ^a With a fayre light shalt thou shyne, t all f endes of f worlde shal honoure the. ^b The people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal bringe giftes, and worshipe f LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the greate name in the.

C Cursed shal they be that despyse the, t all they that blaspheme the, shal be condempned: but blessed shal they be, f buylde the vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in f childre, for they all shalbe blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all f loue f , and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE o my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deluyered his cite Ierusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happie, yf my sede remayne to se f clearnes of Ierusalē.

The gates of Ierusalem shalbe buylde with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the cōpase of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paved with whyte Marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sunge. Prayed be f LORDE, which hath exalted her, f his kyngdome maye be vpon her for euermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND after that Tobias had gottē his sight agayne,^d he lyued two and xl. yeaeres, t sawe his childers children. Now when he was an hundreth and two yeaere olde, he dyed, t was buried honorably in Ninieue. For whan he was sixe and fiftie yeaeres of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yeaere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, and departed in peace.

But in f houre of his death he called vnto B him his sonne Tobias, and seuen yonge springaldes his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruction of Ninieue is at hande,^e for the word of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure brethren that are scatred out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waist, shalbe fylled:^f and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylde agayne, t all soch as feare God shall returne thither: the Heithen also shal forsake their Idols, t come to Ierusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshipe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therefore my children, heare youre C father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness,^g seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre children f they do right, geue allmes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in trueth and with all their power. Hearre me therefore my childre, and abyde not here: but in what daye so euer ye haue buried youre mother besyde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal brynge it to destruction and ende.

After f death of his mother, Tobias D departed away from Ninieue, with his wife and children, and with his childers children, t came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of thē. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fifth generacion and childers childre. And whan he was xcix. yeaere of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued t accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

Chap. XVI.

Iudith syngeth prayse vnto the LORDE. The people come together vnto Ierusalē to geue thanks and prayse vnto the LORDE. How Iudith made hir ende.

The first Chapter.

ARPHAXAT the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble ströge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuëtie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in ƿ twolft yeaere of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor ƿ kynge of the Assirians (which rained in the greäte cite of Ninie) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouer-came hi in ƿ greäte felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Iadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

B Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: "and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greäte felde of Esz-drelö, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Iordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of Iesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of ƿ Assirians sende messaungers. But they all with one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put thē awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciö at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeaere of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of ƿ first moneth, it was deuyed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor ƿ kynge of the Assiriäs, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all ƿ elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secrete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now when they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despyed my commaundement. "Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge citie shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

B Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the soudyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twētye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small catell, and ƿ without nombre. He caused corne to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the gres-hoppers.

C And when he was gone past the borders of the Assirians, he came towarde the greäte mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery ströge holde. As for ƿ welthy citie of Melothus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childrē of Tharsis and the Ismaelites, which laye towarde the wyldernes and vpon the south syde of ƿ londe of Chelon. He went ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye citie that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Iaphet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in ƿ earth.

The iij. Chapter.

SO the kynges & prynces of all citie & A londes sent their Embassitours: namely,

they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal ⁊ Lybia ⁊ Celicia, which came to Holofernes, ⁊ sayde: Let thy wrath cease towards us:
 It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with oure lyues, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all felde, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and houtholdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it altogether. We oure selues and oure children wyll be thynne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemē ⁊ greate power, and conquered all stronge fensed cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, ⁊ soch as were mete for ⁊ warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the indwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers ⁊ the people together, wete forth to mete him as he came, ⁊ receaued him honorably with garlandes ⁊ torches, with daunces, tabrettes and pipes.

Neuertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak:
 but he destroyed their cities, ⁊ hewed downe their woddess. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulde rote out all the goddes of the londe: to ⁊ intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Septopoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The iiii. Chapter.

WHAN the children of Israel ⁊ dwelt in Iewry herde this, they were sore afrayed of him. There came soch tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Ierusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities ⁊ their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rōude aboute vnto

Iericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared corne for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also ⁊ prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towards Eszdrelon (which lyeth ouer agaynst ⁊ greate felde by Dotha Im) ⁊ vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, wherby there might be eny waye and passage to Ierusalem, ⁊ ⁊ they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixe ⁊ mōutaynes.
 And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aulter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one acorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuen in to a pray, and their wyues in to a spoyle, ⁊ their cities shulde not be layed waist, ⁊ ⁊ their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the Heithen.

Then Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE
 wente rōunde aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, ⁊ the LORDE wil heare youre petitions, yf ye cō-tynue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in ⁊ sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruante of the LORDE, which ouer-threw ⁊ Amalechites (that trusted in their might ⁊ power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes ⁊ horsmen) not with weapons, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brent sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred the offerings vnto ⁊ LORDE, beyng arrayed in hayrie clothes, and had aszshes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, ⁊ he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The v. Chapter.

AND worde came to Holofernes the prynce of the warres of the Assyriās, ⁊ the childrē of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance, & how they had stopped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he exceeding wroth, & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaynes of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, & kepeth in the mountaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why do they despyse vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to mete vs, & they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truth before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

B This people is of the generacion of the Caldees,^a they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe & goddesses of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddesses) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a deth^b in to & whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwell foure hundred yeares, in & which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressed them,^c and subdued thē in buyldinge of his cities with makynge of claye & brick, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punished the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

C Now whan the kynge of Egipte let thē go their waye,^d & the plague ceased, & then folowed after thē, to take thē, & to brynge thē agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened & see, so & the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod, In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egipcians folowed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell thē that came after, how it happened.

So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wildernes of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. E There were & bytter waters made swete for thē, that they might drynke, & xl. yeares had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe & arrowe, without bukler or swerde) their God fought for thē, & caused thē to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, & they departed vnfaithfully from & worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped^e any other besyde their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, & to be put to confucion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sory for departyng from the worships of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strēth to withstōde their enemies.

Morouer they slew the kynge of the Canaanites, Iebusites, Pherezites, Ethites, Euites & Amorites,^f & all & mightie in Hesebon, & toke their lōdes & cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in & sight of their God, it wete well with them, for their God hateth vnrighteousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of & waye,^g which God had geuen them, & they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye prersoners into a straūge cōtre. But now lately they haue turned thē selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne^h out of the countrees where they were scatred abroad: and thus haue they cōquered these mountaynes & dwell therein: & as for Ierusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it againe in possession.

And therefore my lorde, make diligēt inquisition, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doutles their God shal deliuer them in to thy handes, & subdue them vnto & power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstāde them, for their God shal defende thē,ⁱ & so shall we be a shame to all & worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, & thought to slaye him, & sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, y^e childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kyng & his hoost? where as they are an vnwapened people, without strenght or vnderstodinge of y^e fettes of warre? That Achior therefore maye knowe, y^e he hath disceaused vs, we wil go vp in to y^e mountaynes: & whan the mightie men of the are taken, he also shalbe stickte with the swerde, y^e all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The vi. Chapter.

SO whan they had left of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. For so much as thou hast prophecied vnto vs, sayenge: that the people of Israel shalbe defended of their God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee whan we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & the shalt thou fele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. The shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow thy sydes, & thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thynkest thy prophecy to be true, why dost thou then chaunge thy coloure? why art thou afayed? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be perfourmed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt fele these thinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyl I sende the vnto yonder people, that whan the punysshment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserued) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punyshed with them.

So Holofernes comaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to deliuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & wete thorow the playne felde. But whan they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstodinge the children of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assiriās had left him bounde.

Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, & Charnim (which is also called Gothoniell) were the pryncipall rulers at the same tyme. Now whan Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before the all, he tolde them, what answere he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & comaunded him for the same cause to be deliuered vnto y^e Israelites: that whan he ouercame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnely tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, praysinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a general complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon oure lowlynes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, y^e thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how y^e thou bringest the lowe, y^e presume of the selues, & make their boast in their owne strength. So whan the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayēge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast prayed, shall so rewarde the, y^e thou shalt rather se their destruction. Whan y^e LORDE oure God then shall geue his seruantes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so y^e if it please y^e, thou with thyne mayest dwell with vs.

Now whan Osias had ended the counsell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refreszshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The vii. Chapter.

A THE next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were ^aan C. ^{xx}. thousande fightinge men on fote, ^{xx} two ^{xx} twentie thousande horsmē, besyde the preparynge of them ^{xx} were wonne, ^{xx} came to them on euery syde out of the countrees ^{xx} cities which he had takē. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyl syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon ^{xx} lyeth towarde Eszdrelon.

B Now whan the childrē of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon ^{xx} ground, strowed aszshes vpon their heades, ^{xx} prayed with one acorde, ^{xx} the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapens, ^{xx} sat betwixte the mountaynes in ^{xx} narrow place, ^{xx} kepte the waye daye ^{xx} night. But whyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this cōmaunded he to be directe another waye, ^{xx} to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they vsed secretly, more for pleasure then for necessite.

C Then wente the Ammonites ^{xx} the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest ouercome them therfore without ^{xx} strykyng of eny battayll, sett mē to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye thē without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so much as it lieth in the mou-taynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he ^bset an hundreth men at euery well rounde aboute.

D And whan this watch had endured twentye dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in ^{xx} whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: 'God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirste and greate destruccion. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto ^{xx} people of Holofernes: for better it is ^{xx} we be captyue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scorne ^{xx} shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen ^{xx} earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punysheth vs according to the deseruyng of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, ^{xx} ye geue vp the cite now in to ^{xx} power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Whan they had spokē out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, ^d we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou ^{xx} art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punysh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scourge, and geue not those ouer that knowlege the, vnto a people which knoweth the not, lest they saye amonge the Heithen: 'where is their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tungen, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: 'O take good hertes vnto you (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peraduenture he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The viij. Chapter.

AND it happened when these wordes came to the eares of Iudith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Idox, the sonne of Ioseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, ⁊ sonne of Iammor, the sonne of Iedeon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Euam, ⁊ sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, ⁊ sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir huszbande was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye haruest. For whyle he was byndinge ⁊ sheeues together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Iudith his desolate wyddow thre yeaeres ⁊ six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made herself a preuy chambre, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hir maydēs. She wore a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones ⁊ the solemne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hyr husbande also had lefte her greate riches, a plenteous housholde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Iudith was a woman of a very good reporte with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whā this Iudith herde, how Osias had promised the people, "that after the fyfte daye he wolde geue vp ⁊ cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambri and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherin Osias hath consented, ⁊ yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte the LORDE? This deuycce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of ⁊ LORDE a tyme, ⁊ appoynte him a daye after youre wyll?

Neuertheles for so much as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouring out teares, and besekynge him of grace. ^bFor God threateneth not as a mā, nether wyll he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke sprete, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs acording to his owne wyll and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, ⁊ brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so much as we folowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsoke their God, ⁊ worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled ⁊ brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cōforte let vs tarry with mekenesse. He shall requyre and make ^dinquisition for oure bloude, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal brynge downe all the Heithen, that ryse vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

Therfore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all ⁊ people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp ther hertes with youre exhortacion, ⁊ they maye call to remembraunce, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, ⁊ they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remēbre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was ^eIsaac, so was Iacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were fōude stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put the selues forth with vnpaciency and murmuryng agaynst God, perished of the destroyr, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shulde not we vndertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to considre, that all these punyshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes ⁊ myszdedes: Beleuyng also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the seruantes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruction.

Then sayde Osias ⁊ the elders vnto Iudith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprove thy wordes. Praise thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Iudith sayde vnto them: "Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseke God, that he wyl brynge my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I deuysed: ^aYe shal stōde this night before the porte, and I wyl go forth with Abra my mayde: Praye ye therefore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remēbre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, axe ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE your God for me. Then Osias the prynce of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The ix. Chapter.

NOW whā they were gone their way, Iudith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed aszhes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my fater ^cSymeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulness, and that rauyshed ^dvyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wiues in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruantes, which bare a zeale vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseke ^eſ. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnyng, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, ^f and thy iudgmentes are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the ^gEgipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruantes, ^h and put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokdest vpon their hoost, castinge a thicke darcknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters ouerwhelmed them.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in ⁱ power and multitude of their men of warre, in their charettes, ^j arrowes ^k and speares, and knowe not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyest warres from the begynnyng, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from ^l begynnyng, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, ^m they wyl vnhalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waist the tabernacle of thy name, and to cast downe the horne of thine alther with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) ⁿ the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and ^o thou mayest smyte him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

This shal brynge thy name an euerlastinge remēbraunce, yf the hande of a woman ^p ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondest not in ^q power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strēth of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

O thou God of the heauens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callynge vpon the, and puttyng my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy ^r couenaut O LORDE, and mynister wordes in my mouth, ^s and stablysh this deuice in my hert, that thy house maye contynue still in holynes, and that all the Heithen maye knowe and vnderstōde, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

The x. Chapter.

AND whan she had left of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed ^t hayrie cloth from her, ^u put of the garmentes of hir wyddowhode, waszshed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an houue vpon hir heade, and put on such apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best aray.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beuty and fayrnesse (for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therefore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so \hat{y} she was exceedinge amiable and weliaouered in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred τ chese, and wente hir waye.

13 Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, τ marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geue \hat{y} his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deucey of thy hert: that Ierusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy τ righteous. And all they \hat{y} were there, sayde with one voyce: so be it, so be it. Iudith made hir prayer vnto \hat{y} LORDE, τ wente out at \hat{y} porte, she τ hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spies of \hat{y} Assirians met with her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of \hat{y} Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geuē vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde the selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therefore haue I deuyed by my self after this maner: I wyll go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyll shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

C And whan these men had herde hir wordes, τ considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) τ sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued thy life by fyndinge oute this deucey, \hat{y} thou woldest come downe to oure lorde: τ be thou sure, that whā thou cōmest vnto him, he shal intreate the well, τ thou shalt please him at \hat{y} hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes paulyon, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome τ taken with hir bewtye. Then saide his seruantes: who wolde despyse \hat{y} people of \hat{y} Iewes, \hat{y} haue so fayre wemē? Shulde we not by reason fight against the for these? So whā Iudith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, \hat{y} was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she loked fast vpō him, τ fell downe vpō the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The xi. Chapter.

14 THEN sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despyed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst the. But tell me now, what is the cause \hat{y} thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Iudith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after \hat{y} wordes of thy hād-mayden, the LORDE shall brynge thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe Iyueh, τ as truly as his power Iyueh, which is in the to the punyshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of \hat{y} felde. For all people speake of thy prudēt actiuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

15 The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaūdest to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so worth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl deliuer them ouer vnto the enemye. And for so moch as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afraied of the. They suffre greate hunger also, τ for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appointed to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbydde thē to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, E y they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto y, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worshipec God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde thē their synne: then shal I come and shew the, & brynge the throw the myddest of Ierusalem, so that thou shalt haue all y people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so moch as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so moch as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

D These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruantes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so moch as thy promyse is good, yf thy God performe it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The xij. Chapter.

A THEN commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her frō his table. Iudith answered him, and sayde: "As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these thinges that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Iudith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wēte forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wassshed herself in the well water. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the delyueraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

C Vpon y fourth daye it happened, y Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlayne: Go thy waye, and counsell this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to seorne, that she were come from him vnmedled withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afayed, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

D So she stode vp, and deckte herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he brent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, than euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery with her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A NOW when it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, euery mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber dores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne.^a So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makyng her prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Ierusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye perfourme the thinge, which I haue deuysed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lōwsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his heade, and sayde: Strength me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and deluyered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried asfarre of vnto fy watchmen vpon the wallis: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle & greate, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerychone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclaimed.

C Whan euery man now helde his tonge, Iudith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me this honde mayden he hath performed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assiriās, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkennes: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynes of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & fy with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye deluyered. O geue thanks vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.^b

So they praysed the LORDE altogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias fy chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded fy a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mē, which shal all waye remembre fy power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God oure LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Amen.

E Achior also was called, & he came. Then sayde Iudith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be auenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smyttē of the head of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest se that it so is, beholde, this is fy heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened \hat{y} with destruccion, sayenge :

 "whan the people of Israel is takē, I shall cause the also to be stickte with the swerde.
 Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish & feare, so \hat{y} he swowned withall.
 But after that he was come agayne to himself,
 he fell downe before her & prayed her, sayēge :
 Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Iacob : for all the people that heare of thy name, shall prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IUDITH saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Styck vp this heade vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapen, and fall out violently:
 not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tētes se this, they shall of neces-site be cōpelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captayne to the battyll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes paui-lion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceauē that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vnto you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seyng the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his Heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

NOW as soone as it was daye, they stickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyes sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russzinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him.
 For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes,^a and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Iudith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceauē no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltered in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Iudiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto
 the people, and sayde: one womā of \hat{y} Iewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame.

For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and trembling vpon them, so \hat{y} theyr myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an exceedyng greate crye in the whole hoost.

The xv. Chapter.

NOW whan all the hoost herde that Holofernes was headed, their mynde and counsell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vndertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the felde, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan \hat{y} children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with trōpettes, blowing and makynge a greate crye after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not thē selues together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messaungers vnto all the cities and cōtrees
 of Israel.

So all the regions and euery cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to y^e vttemost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came in to the tētes of the Assrians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nōbre of the catell, and of all costly Iewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Ioachim the Hye prest at Ierusalē, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

¶ Now whan she came out vnto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshipec of the cite of Ierusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honoure of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynnes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne huszbande: therfore hath the hāde of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for euer. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyles of the Assrians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both wemen, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The xvi. Chapter.

¶ THEN sange Iudith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O syng vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. ^aIt is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might deliuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, ^band their horses couered the valleys.

He purposed to haue brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed awaye my children and virgins in to captiuyte, but the almighty LORDE hurte him, and deliuered him in to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greate giauntes sett them selues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari with hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. ^eFor she layed awaie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an houue, to begyle him. Hir slippers rauynshed his eyes, hir bewtye captiuated his mynde, ^fwith the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of y^e Assrians, whan my symple appeared, drye of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearsed them thorow, and slayne them as fugityue childrē: they perysed in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let us syng a songe of thākesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we syng vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shulde serue the, ^gfor thou spakest but the worde, & they were made: thou sente thy sprete, & they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundacions with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greate with y^e in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generacion, for the almighty LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, & in the daye of iudgmēt wyl he vyset them. For he shall geue fyre & wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges.

^e Gen. 1. a. Psal. 32. a. Psal. 103. d.

And Iudith offred all Holofernes weapens, and all the Iewels, that y^e people had geuē her, "and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: & this ioye by reason of the victory, with Iudith, endureth thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so y^e after hir huszbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worships. She dwelt in hir huszbandes house an hundredreth and fyue yeaere, & left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir huszbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. ^b So longe as she lyued, there was none that troulbe Israel, and many yeaeres also after hir death.

The daye wherin this victory was gotten, was solelymply holden, and rekened of the Iewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Iewes euer sence, vnto this daye.

The xi. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describved the dreame of Mardocheus.

^a MARDOCHEUS the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Semei, ^a y^e sonne of Cisei of y^e trybe of Ben Iamin a Iew: which had his dwellynge in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, & excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuerthelesse he was one of the presoners, whom ^b Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilon with Iechonias the kyng of Iuda.) In the seconde yeaere of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of y^e moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, & greate vprour in y^e londe: & y^e he sawe two greate dragōs, ready to fight one agaist another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all Heithen were vp, to fight agaynst y^e righteous people. And y^e same daye was full of darcknes & very vnclaire, full of trouble & anguysh, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared y^e plage & euell y^e was deuysed ouer thē, & were at a poynte with them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greate ryuer & in to many waters. And with y^e it was daye, & the sonne rose vp agayne. And y^e lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The xij. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two seruauntes agaynst the kynge, and therfore doth the kynge rewarde him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell "handes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then caused the kynge to examen ȝ two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

BThis the kynge caused to be put in ȝ Cronicles for a euerlasting remembraunce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulness of his, he gaue him a rewarde. But Aman the sonne of Amadathu the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte, vnder-toke to hurte Mardocheus ȝ his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The xiiij. Chapter

The copie of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses (by the entisinge of Amā) sent out in to all countres, for the destrucion of the Iewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses which ⁴raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twētye londes, sendeth his frendly salutation vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lord over many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed with equitye allwaye and gentylnes, to gouerne those that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholly to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to brynge my kingdome vnto tranqylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wysdome, whose good wyll, trueth ȝ faithfulness hath oft bene shewed ȝ proued (which was also ȝ pryncipall ȝ next vnto ȝ kinge) Amā by name, which certified vs, how ȝ in all lōdes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, ȝ made statutes ȝ lawes agaynst all other people, ȝ haue allwaye despyed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you ȝ not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceaue the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, ȝ withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therfore haue we commaūded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues ȝ children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: ȝ ȝ there shalbe no mercy shewed, ȝ no man spared. And this shalbe done ȝ xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranqylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of ȝ LORDE, ȝ made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no mā that can withstōde ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen ȝ earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, ȝ can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumpcion, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipec yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene cōtent, and ȝ with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst euē his fotesteppes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not sett the honour of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshipe none but onely ȝ my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

¶ And therefore O LORDE thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine enheritaunce of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered & brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto thy people, whō thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyue O LORDE, and prayse thy name. O LORDE, suffre not ȝ mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All ȝ people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruccion stode before their eyes.

The xiii. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

¶ QUENE Hester also beyng in the battayll of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oymntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe, All the places where she was wōte to haue ioye afore, those fylled she with ȝ hayre, ȝ she plucte out herself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kyng, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but ȝ, for my misery and destruccion is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde ^aout of the kynred of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amōge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritaunce, and loke what thou didest promise thē, thou hast made it good vnto thē.

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, ^btherefore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped thy goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth thē not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their hondes vpon the hondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordered and appoynted: to destroye thyne inheritaunce, to shut and to stoppe ȝ mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshipe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the Heithen, ȝ they maye prayse the power & vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshly kyng for euer.

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto thē that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuyce vpō them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in ȝ tyme of oure distres and of oure trouble. Strength me O thou kyng of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquēt^c and pleasaunt speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to ȝ hate of oure enemie, to destroye him, and all soch as consent vnto him. But delyuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely ȝ. LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshipe of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncircūcyded and of all Heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, ȝ I hate the token of my preemynence & worshipe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, & that I abhorre it as an vncleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyet and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amās table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynkofferinges, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens ȝ daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboute all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuer vs out of the hande of y^e wicked, & delyuer me out of my feare.

The rb. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

AND vpon y^e thirde daye it happened, that Hester^a layed awaye y^e mournynge garmētes, and put on hir glorious apparell, and decte herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder & Sauoure of all thinges) toke two maydes with her: vpon the one she leane^d hir self, as one y^e was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amaybe, but hir hert was soroufull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the dores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett with precious stones, and he was very terrible. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and loked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leane^d hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

33 Neuertheles God turned y^e kynges mynde, that he was gentle,^b that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, & helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, & sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am thy brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. Thē sayde she: I sawe the^c (O lorde) as an angell of God, & my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of amyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was afraied, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The rbi. Chapter.

A cople of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerxes caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Iewes.

THE greate kynge Artaxerxes, which raigneth frō India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, such as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye frendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worships, be euer y^e more proude and hye mynded, and vndertake not only to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and begynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not only all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumpcion (as they that be vmynde^dfull and vnthākfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, y^e seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth & punysheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, y^e they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are cōmytted to be handled, waxe proude, and defyle thē selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bringeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceau^e and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

35 Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vn honest, and noysome thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to be warre in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyet & peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for y^e thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu y^e Macedonyan^d (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amōge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the frendshipe that we beare towards all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hie honoure of euery man, as the next and pryncipall vnto the kyng, he coude not forbear him self from his pryde, hath vndertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he desyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had takē them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Iewes (which were accused of ſ wicked, ſ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most Hye lyuynge God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherefore, as for the letters and cōmaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented thē, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruynge.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Iewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpō ſ xiiij. daye of ſ xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguys and trouble wolde haue oppressed thē. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wherin ſ chosen people shulde haue perished.

Morouer, amōge the hie solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also with all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraūce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lōdes that do not this, shal horribly perish and be destroyed with the swerde and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of ſ wilde beastes & foules.

The boke of Wysdome.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

An exortaciō for iudges and rulers to loue wysdome. The sprete of wysdome hateth falsede, dissimulacion and Ypocrysie, rebuketh vnrighteousnesse and abhorreth wicked doers.

Chap. II.

The ymaginaciōs and thoughtes of the vngodly, how they geue thē selues ouer vnto synne, and persecute all vertue and trueth.

Chap. III.

The felicity and health of godly people, though they be put here to trouble and heynesne: Agayne, what sorow shal happen to the vngodly and their children.

Chap. IIII.

To lyue chaist & godly withall, is cōmendable. A dispraye of the wicked. The honoure of verteous age. The shamefull death of the vngodly.

Chap. V.

How the iust men shal stōde against the wicked, that haue put them here to trouble & what sorowe shall come vpon the vngodly. Agayne, what ioye shal happen to the righteous, which haue God himself for their defece.

Chap. VI.

An exortacion vnto soch as be in rule and auctoryte, to receaue wysdome. A commendacion of wysdome.

Chap. VII.

All men haue like intraiue in to the worlde: yet who so calleth vpon God for wysdome, shal haue his desyre. The profit that cōmeth by wysdome passeth all other thinges.

Chap. VIII.

Wysdome shulde be receaued in youth. He that marieth himself vnto her, shall optayne loue of God and men.

Chap. IX.

A prayer vnto God for the gift of wysdome.

Chap. X.

What profit and good came by wysdome in the olde tyme.

Chap. XI.

How wysdome ledeth the righteous, & how the vngodly are punyshed thorow the mightie hande of God.

Chap. XII.

God is mercifull and suffreth longe, to the intent that synners shulde amende.

Chap. XIII.

Vayne are they that haue not the knowlege of the lyuyng God, but turne vnto the creatures: vnhappye are they that honoure ymages.

Chap. XIII.

The worshippinge of ymages. The power of God. Punyshment of them that make ymages, and of soch as worshipe them. How ymages came vp first. The honouringe of ymages is the cause, begynnynge, and ende of all myschefe.

Chap. XV.

The faithfull haue respecte vnto God and not vnto ymages.

Chap. XVI.

God punisheth the wicked, but defendeth the godly, & that by greate wonders.

Chap. XVII.

Of the greate darcknesse in Egipte, and byndnesse of the vngodly.

Chap. XVIII.

How God destroyed the firstborne of Egipte. Gods people eate the easter lambe ioyfully, the Egiptians mourne. God punysheth the synners in the wilderness. Moses intreateth for the people.

Chap. XIX.

Like as the wicked are euer synnyng more and more, so doth the wrath of God neuer cease, tyll they be destroyed. Of them that were punyshed in the tyme of Loth.

The first Chapter.

A O SET youre affection vpō wysdome, ye that be iudges of the earth.^a Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & seke him in the synghenesse of hert. ^b For he will be foude of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto such as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be allowed,) reformeth ^c vnwyse. And why? wysdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nurtoure, & withdraweth himself frō ^d ȝ thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge: & where wickednes hath the vpper hāde, he flieth from thence. ^e For the sprete of wysdome is louynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witness of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. ^f For the sprete of ȝ LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and ȝ same that vpholdeth all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

B ^g Therefore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgmēt of reprove. And why? inquisicion shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shalbe punished. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudgings shal not be hydd. Therefore beware of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slaūder. ^h For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

C ⁱ O seke not youre owne death in ȝ erreure of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre owne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruction of the luyng. For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyng: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruction in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteounesse is euerlastinge and immortall, but vnrighteousnes bringeth death.) Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both with wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ij. Chapter.

A FOR ȝ vngodly talke & ymagin thus amonge them selues (but not right:) ^a The tyme of oure life is but short & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioie ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man ȝ turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrils, & ȝ wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for oure body, it shalbe very aszhes ȝ are quēched, & oure soule shal vanish as ȝ soft ayre. Oure life shall passe awaye as ȝ trace of a cloude, & come to naught as ȝ myst ȝ is dryuē awaye with the beames of ȝ Sonne, & put downe with the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

B For oure tyme is a very shadow ȝ passeth awaye, ^b and after oure ende there is no returnynge, for it is fast sealed, so ȝ no mā cōmeth agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye ȝ pleasures ȝ there are, & let vs soone vse ȝ creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues with good wyne & oyntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne oure selues with roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but oure lust shal go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some token of oure pleasure in euery place, for ȝ is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppresse the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde ȝ heades ȝ are gray for age. Let ȝ lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for ȝ thinge ȝ is feble is no-thinge worth. Therefore let vs defraude the righteous, & why? he is not for oure profit, yee he is cleane cōtrary to oure doinges. He checketh vs for offendinge agaynst ȝ lawe, &

slaundreth vs as transgressours of all nurtoure. He maketh his boost to haue f knowledge of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of our thoughtes: f It greueth vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he withdraweth him self from oure wayes as from fylthynes: he cōmendeth greatly f latter ende of the iust, f maketh his boast f God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be f true sonne of God, f he will receaue him f delyuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitefull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite f proue his pacience. f Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Soch thinges do the vngodly ymagin, f go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath bylnded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousness, ner regarde the worships that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vndestroyed, yee f after the ymage of his awne licknesse made he him. f Neuerthelesse thorow enyve of the deuell came death in to the worlde, f and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT the soules of f righteous are in f hande of God, f f payne of death shal not touch thē. f In f sight of f vnwyse they appeare to dye, f their ende is takē for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, f yet is their hope full of immortallite. They are punished but in few thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, f fyndeth thē mete for himself: yee as the golde in the furnace doth he trye them, f receaueth them as a brentofferinge, and when f tyme commeth they shalbe looked vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes f renne thorow the rede buszshe. f They shal iudge the nacions, f haue dominion ouer f people, f their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They f put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trueth, and soch as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue giftes f peace. f But the vngodly shalbe punyshed accordinge to their awne ymaginaciōs, for they haue despyed the righteous, f forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyeth wyszdomē f nurtoure, he is vnhappye, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childrē most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather f baren f vndefyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedd: she shal haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is f gelded, f which with his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymaged wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be geuen f speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in f temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, f the rote of wyszdomē shall neuer fade awaye. As for f childrē of aduouters, they shal come to an ende f the sede of an vnrighteous bedd shal be rotated out. And though they lyue lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, f their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

The iij. Chapter.

OHOW fayre is a chaist generacion with f vertue? The memoriall therof is immortal, for it is knowne with God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple thereat: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned f holden in honoure, f wynneth f rewarde of the vndefyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childrē is vnprofitable, and the thinges f are planted with whordome, shal take no depe rote, ner laye eny fast foundation. f Though they be grene in the branches for a tyme, yet shal they be shakē with the wynde: for they stonde not fast, f thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnperfecte braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children y are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken with death, yet shal he be in rest.

B Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondesth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vndeified life is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amoge synners, he traslated him. Yee sodely was he taken awaye, to the intent y wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstodinge, & y yporisyse shulde not begyle his soule. For y craftie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges darck, y vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne asyde y vnderstodinge of y symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therefore haisted he to take him awaye fro amonge y wicked. This the people se, & vnderstonde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how y y lounyng fauoure & mercy of God is vpō his saintes, & y he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

C Thus y righteous y is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are luyng: & y youth y is soone brought to an ende, y lōge life of y vnrighteous. For they se y ende of y wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore y LORDE hath taken him a waie. And why? they se him & despise him, therefore shall God also laugh thē to scorn: So y they thē selues shal dye here after (but without honoure) yee in shame amonge y deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those y be puft vp, & remoue thē fro y fundacions, so y they shalbe laied waist vnto the hiest. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shall perishe. So they beyng afraied shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye thē.

The 6. Chapter.

A THEN shal y righteous stonde in greate stedfastnesse^a agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely with thē, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed with horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of y sodane health: groninge for very distresse of mynde, & shall saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguysch of mynde):

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vpō. We fooles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be without honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therefore we haue erred from the waye of trueth, y light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vnderstodinge rose not vp vpō vs. We haue weered oure selues in y waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath oure pryde done vnto vs? B Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? *All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger rennyng before: as a shippe y passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether y path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde y flyeth thorow y ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowne, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemēce of hir goinge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no tokē of hir waye can be foude. Or like as whē an arowe is shott at a marck, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cōmeth together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

Soch wordes shal they that haue synned, C speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye with the wynde: like as thynne scommē y is scatred abrode with the storme: like as y smoke which is dispersed here & there with the wynde, & as y remembrance of a straüger^a y tarieth for a daie, & thē departeth.

But y righteous shal lyue for euermore:

their rewarde also is with the LORDE, & their remembrance with the Hyest. Therefore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome & a beutifull crowne of the LORDES hande: for with his right hande shal he couer the, & with his owne arme shall he defende the. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harnesse, and he shal wapē y creature to be aūged of y enemies. He shal put on "righteousnes for a brest plate, & take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The invincible shyld of equite shall he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpē for a speare, & the whole compase of the worlde shall fight with him agaynst the vnwyse.

Thē shal the thunder boltes go out of y lightnings, & come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shall fall thick hailes, & y water of y see shal be wroth agaynst the, & the floudes shal renne roughly together. Yee a mightie wynde shal stōde vp agaynst them, & a storme shall scatter the abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealing of the shal bringe all the lōde to a wyldernes, & wickednes shall ouerthrowe the dwellinges of the mightie.

The vi. Chapter.

WYSZDOME is better then strength,^a & a mā of vnderstādinge is more worth the one y is strōge. Heare therefore (O ye kinges) & vnderstonde: O lerne ye y be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue eare ye y rule y multitudes, & delite in moche people. For the power is geuē you of the LORDE,^c & the strēth from the Hyest: which shal trie youre workes and search out youre ymaginaciōs: How that ye beyng officers of his kyngdome, haue not executed true iudgment, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousness, ner walked after his will. Horribly & that right soone shall he appeare vnto you: for an harde iudgmēt shal they haue y beare rule. Mercy is graited vnto the sypyle,^d but they that be in auctorite shalbe sore punyshed. For God which is LORDE ouer all, shall excepte no mā's personne, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mā's greatnesse: for he hath made y small and greate, & careth for all alyke. But the mightie shal haue y sorer punyshmēt.

Vnto you therefore (o ye kinges) do I speake, y ye maye lerne wysdome and not go amysse:

for they y kepe righteousness shalbe righteously iudged: and they y are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answer. Wherefore set youre lust vpon my wordes, & loue the, so shal ye come by nourtoure. Wysdome is a noble thinge, & neuer faydeth awaie: yee she is easely sene of the that loue her, & founde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them y desyre her, y she maye first shewe herself vnto the. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauaile, for he shal fynde her syttinge ready at his dores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekyng soch as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them with all diligece. For y vnfaired desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nourtoure is loue, and loue is the keepinge of hir lawes. Now the keepinge of y lawes is perfection & an vn corrupte life, & an vn corrupte life maketh a man familer with God. And so the desyre of wysdome ledeth to y kingdome euerlastinge. If youre delyte be the in royall seates & cepters (o ye kynes of the people) set youre lust vpō wysdome, y ye maye raigne for euer more. O loue the light of wysdome, all ye y be rulers of the people. As for wysdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I wil tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from y begynnynge of the natiuite, and brynge the knowlege of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the trueth. Nether will I haue to do with cōsumynge envye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wysdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kynge is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourtoure then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The viij. Chapter.

I MYSELF also am a mortall man, like as all other, & am come of y earthy generaciō of him y was first made, & in my mothers wōbe^a was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in bloude thorow the sede of man, & the cōmodious appetite of slepe. Whan I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men,

¶ I fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge & wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, & brought vp with greate cares. For there is no kinge y^e hath had eny other begynnyng of byrth.^a All men then haue one intraunce vnto life, & one goinge out in like maner.

B Wherefore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geue me: I called, & the sprete of wysz-dome came in to me. I set more by her the by kingdomes & royall seates, & counted riches nothinge in cōparison of her.^b As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue wel fare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. ¶ All good thinges came to me with her, & innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in the all, for this wysz-dome wēte before me, & I knew not y^e she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaynedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the giftes of wyszdomē.

C God hath graunted me to talke wysely, & conueniēty to hādle the thinges y^e he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, y^e ledeth vnto wyszdomē, & teacheth to vse wyszdomē aright. ¶ In his hāde are we & oure wordes: yee all oure wyszdomē, oure vnderstandinge & knowlege of all oure workes. For he hath geue me y^e true sciēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how y^e worlde was made, & the powers of y^e elemētes: y^e begynnyng, endinge & myddest of y^e tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: y^e course of the yeaere: the ordinaunces of the starrēs: the natures & kindes of beastes: the furiosnesse of beastes: the power of y^e wyndes: the ymaginacions of mē: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all soch thinges as are secrete & not loked for, haue I lerned. For the work-master of all thinges hath taught me wysz-dome. In hir is y^e sprete of vnderstādinge, which is holy, manifolde, one onely, sotyll, curteous, discrete, quyk, vndefyled, playne, swete, louyng the thinge y^e is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gētle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: hauyng all vertues, circūspecte in allthinges: receauinge all spretes of vnderstādinge beige cleane & sharpe. For wiszdomē is neember the all neēble thiges: she goeth thorow & attayneth to all thiges, because of hir clenness. For she is y^e breth of y^e power of God, & a pure cleane expressing of y^e clearnes of Allmightie God. Therefore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is y^e bryghtnes of y^e euerlastige light, y^e vndefyled myrroure of y^e maiesty of God, & y^e ymage of his goodnesse. And for so much as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, & amōge y^e people cōveyeth she herself in to y^e holy soules. She maketh Gods frendes & prophetes: for God loueth no mā, but him in whō wyszdomē dwelleth. For she is more beutyfull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starrēs, and the daye is not to be cōpared vnto her: for vpō y^e daye cōmeth night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wyszdomē, and foolishnes maye not be with her.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME reacheth frō one ende to another mightily, & lougly doth she ordre all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self with her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath y^e cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is y^e scolemastresse of y^e nurtoure of God, & y^e choser out of his workes. Yf a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wiszdomē, y^e worketh all thiges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstādinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, y^e worketh more the wysz-dome? Yf a man loue vertue & righteousnes, let him labour for wyszdomē, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteousnes & strēgh, which are soch thinges as mē can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. Yf a mā desyre moch knowledge, she cā tell y^e thinges y^e are past, & discerne thinges for to come: she knoweth y^e sotiltes of wordes, & cā expōide darke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs & wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, & comō lougly with her: no doute she shal geue me good coucell, & speake cōfortably vnto me in my carefulness & grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the comōs & lordes of ꝑ counsell. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so ꝑ I shal be maruelous in ꝑ sight of greate mē, & ꝑ faces of prynces shal wōder at me. Whā I holde my tōge, they shal byde my leysure: whā I speake, they shal loke vpo me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpo their mouth. Morouer, by the meanes of her I shal optayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlastinge memoriall, amōge thē ꝑ come after me. I shal set ꝑ people in ordre, and the nacions shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amōge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest with her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, & hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth & ioye.

¶ Now whan I cōsidered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my hert, how ꝑ to be ioyned vnto wyszdome is immortallite, & greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how ꝑ in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company with her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute sekyng, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grewe to more vnderstādinge, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuertheles whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (& ꝑ was a poynte of wyszdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The ix. Chapter.

¶ GOD of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou ꝑ hast made^a all thiges with thy worde, & ordeyned mā thorow thy wyszdome, ꝑ he shulde haue dominio^b ouer ꝑ creature, which thou hast made: ꝑ he shulde ordre ꝑ worlde acordinge to equite & righteousness, & execute iudgmēt with a true hert) geue me wyszdome, which is euer aboute thy seate, & put me not out frō amōge thy children: for I thy seruau^ct & sonne of thy handmayden, am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and ꝑ lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amōge the children of men, yet yf thy wyszdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. But thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto thy people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

Thou hast cōmaunded me to buylde a temple vpon thy holy mount, & an aluter in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a licknesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared frō the beginnyng, and thy wyszdome with ꝑ, which knoweth thy workes: which also was with ꝑ whan thou maydest ꝑ worlde, & knew what was acceptable in thy sight, & right in thy commaundementes. O sende her out of thy holy heauens and from the trone of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & laboure with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in thy sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shal lede me soberly in my workes, and preserue me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to syt in my fathers seate. For what man is he, that maye knowe the counsell of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & oure forecastes are but vncertayne. And why? a mortall and corruptible body is heuy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge ꝑ museth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discern the thinges that are vpon earth, and greate laboure haue we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before oure eyes: Who will then seke out the grōude of the thinges that are done in heauē? Oh LORDE, who cā haue knowlege of thy vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wyszdome and sende thy holy goost frō aboue? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: ꝑ men maye lerne ꝑ thinges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserued thorow wyszdome.

The x. Chapter.

WYSZDOME preserued f first mā, whō God made^a a fater of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the moulde of f earth, t gaue him power to rule all thinges. When the vnrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wysdome, f brotherheade perished^b thorow f wrath of murthur. Agayne, whā f water^c destroyed f whole worlde, wysdome preserued the righteous thorow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Morouer whā wickednes had gotten f vpperhande, so f the nacions were putt vp with pryde, ^dshe knewe f righteous, preserued him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vp sure mercy for his children. ^eShe preserued the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly f perished, what tyme as f fyre fell downe vpon f v. cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfrutefull, waist and smokinge lōde geueth testimony of their wickednesse: yee the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a tokē of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a piler of salt. For all such as regarded not wysdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto mē, a memoriall of their foolishnes: so f in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for such as take hede vnto wysdome, she shal delyuer them from sorowe.

Whan the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, ^fwysdome led him the right waye, shewed him f kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In f deceitfulness of such as defrauded him, she stode by him, t made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from f disceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, f he might knowe, how that wysdome is stronger then all thinges. ^gWhan the righteous was solde, she forsoke him not, but delyuered him frō synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and fayled him not in the bandes: ^htyll she had brought him the cepter of f realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, t brought him to perpetuall worshippe.

She delyuered the righteous people and faultlesse sede, ⁱfrom the nacions that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruauant of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kyng. She gaue f righteous the rewarde of their labours, t led them forth a maruelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. ^kShe brought them thorow the reed see, and caried them thorow the greате water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyles of the vngodly, and ^lprayed thy holy name (o LORDE) and magnified thy victorious hād with one acorde. For wysdome openeth the mouth of f domme, t maketh f tonges of babes to speake.

The xi. Chapter.

SHE ordred their workes in the hādes of ^mthe holy prophet: ⁿso f they wente thorow f wyldernes f was not inhabited, t pitched their tētes in f waist deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, t were auenged of their aduersaries. ^oWhā they were thirstie, they called vpō f , t water was geuē them out of f rok, t their thirst slockened out of f harde stone. For by f thinges, where thorow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their nede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest mās bloude in steade of luyunge water. And where as they had scarcenesse in f rebuke whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrst f was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto honour, t slaye their aduersaries.

For whan they were tryed t nourtured with fatherly mercy, ^pthey knowleged how the vngodly were iudged, and punyshed thorow f wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a fater, t proued thē: but vnto f other thou hast bene a boysteous kyng, layed hard to their charge, & condēd thē. Whether they were absent or present, their punyshmēt was alyke. For their grefe was dubble: namely, mournyng, and [¶] remembraunce of thynges past. But whā they perceaued [¶] their punyshmētes dyd thē good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at [¶] ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in [¶] out-casting they thought scorne, as of an abiecte. Neuerthelesse [¶] righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euen like as [¶] thoughtes of [¶] foolish were, so was also their wickednes.

C Where as certayne mē now (thorow erreure) dyd worshipe domme [¶] serpentes & vayne beestes, thou sendest a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: [¶] they might knowe, that lōke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punyshed. For vnto thy allmighty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of [¶] Beeres, or woode lyōs, or cruell beastes of a straūge kynde, such as are vnkowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smoking breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtinge, but also kyll them with their horrible sight. Yee without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scatered abroad thorow the breth of thy power.

D Neuertheles thou hast ordred all thynges in measure, nōbre & weight. For thou hast euer had greate strēghth & might, & who maye withstōde [¶] power of thine arme? And why like as [¶] small thynges [¶] [¶] balauce weyeth, so is [¶] worlde before [¶]: yee as a droppe of [¶] morning dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as [¶] though thou sawest not the sinnes of mē, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thynges that are, and hatest none of thē whō thou hast made: nether didest thou ordeyne or make any thyng of euell will.

How might any thyng endure, yf it wer not thy will? Or how coude any thyng be preserued, excepte it were called of [¶]? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, o LORDE, thou louer of soules.

The xij. Chapter.

O LORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sprete in all thynges? Therfore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wrōge, and warnest them, concernyng the thynges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (o LORDE) and exortest thē to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde [¶] inhabitants of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they comytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wytcheraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominaciōs, myszbe-leues & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that [¶] londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childrē of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendest [¶] forerūners of thyne hoost, euē hornettes to destroye thē out by lytle & litle. Not [¶] thou wast vnable to subdue [¶] vngodly vnto [¶] [¶] righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or with one rough worde to destroye thē together: But thy mynde was to dryue thē out by lytle & litle, geuinge thē time & place to amende: knowinge well, [¶] it was an vnrighteous nacion & wicked of nature, & [¶] their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed sede from [¶] begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done [¶]? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before thy face an auēger of vnrighteous mē? Or who wil blame [¶], yf [¶] people perish, whō thou hast made? For there is none other [¶] God but thou, [¶] carest for all thynges: [¶] thou mayest declare how [¶] thy iudgmēt is not vnright. There dare nether kige, ner tyrāūt in thy sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch thē as thou art righteous thy self, thou ordrest all thīges righteously, & [¶] punishest euē hī [¶] hath not deserved to be punyshed, & takest him for a straūger & an aleaunt in [¶] lōde of thy power. For thy power is [¶] begynnynge of righteousnes: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vnto all. When men thinke f not to be of a full strength, thou declarest thy power: t boldly deluyereest thou them ouer f knowe f not. But thou LORDE of power iudgeth quietly, and ordrest us with greate worshipec, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

B By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be iust and lounyng: and hast made thy childrē to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgeth, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and with soch diligence deluyered f enemies of thy seruātes, which were worthy to dye (where thorow thou gauest thē tyme t place of amēdement f they might turne frō their wickednes) with how greate diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childrē, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne t made couenautes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyshest oure enemies dyuerse wayes: to f intēt f whā we punysh, we shulde remēbre thy goodnesse: t whan we oure selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

E Wherefore where as men haue lyued ignorantly t vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed thē sore, euē thorow f same thinges that they worshipped. For they wente astraye very lōge in f waye of erreure, t helde f beestes (which euē their enemies despysed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornefull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childrē of ignorance. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by those scornes t rebukes, they felt the worthy punishmēt of God. For f thinges f they suffred, they bare thē vn-paciētly, beinge not contēt in them but vn-wyllinge. And whan they perished by f same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowleged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therfore came f ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A VAYNE are all men, which haue not f knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euerlastinge.

Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some f course of f starres, some f water, some toke Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which rule f earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes: yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more fayrer he is that made them. For the maker of beuty hath ordered all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued therby, f he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse t beuty of the creature, f maker therof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstandinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God t wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wēte aboute in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes f are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandinge and knowledge was so greate, f they coude discern the worlde and f creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out f LORDE therof?

But vnhappye are they, and amonge the deed is their hope, that call thē God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by connyng, the similitude of beastes, or eny vayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. C Or as whan a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the bark of it connyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be vsed, and dighteth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carueth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his connyng) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some colour vpon it. Then maketh he a conueniēt tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessity be helped.

B Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seketh helpe at it, he axeth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it ŷ hath no soule: for health, he maketh his peticion vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: ¶ to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges ŷ he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do no maner of good.

The liiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, another mā purposinge to sayle ¶ begynnyng to take his iourney thorow ŷ raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, ŷ is farre weaker, thē ŷ tre ŷ beareth him. For as for it, coueteousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, ¶ ŷ craftes mā made it with his connyng. But thy prouydence (O father) gouerneth all thinges frō ŷ begynnyng, for thou hast made a waye in ŷ see, ¶ a sure path in the myddest of ŷ wawes: declaringe therby, ŷ thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuerthelesse, ŷ ŷ workes of thy wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made:^a ¶ therefore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wod passinge ouer the see in a shyppe, ¶ are saued.

B For in the olde tyme also whā the proude giauntes perished,^c he (in whō the hope was left to increase ŷ worlde) wēte in to the shippe, which was gouerned thorow thy hande, and so left sede behinde him vnto ŷ worlde. For happie is ŷ tre where thorow righteousnes cometh: but cursed is the ymage of wod, ŷ is made with hādes, yee both it ¶ he ŷ made it: He, because he made it: ¶ it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge.^d For the vngodly ¶ his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so ŷ worke ¶ he ŷ made it also shal be punyshed together. Therefore shal there a plage come vpon the ymagēs of the Heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the sekinge out of ymagēs is the begynnyng of whordome, and the bringinge vp of them is the destruccion of life. For they were not from the begynnyng, nether shall they cōtinue for euer. The welthy ydiles of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therefore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whē a father mourned for his sonne ŷ was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all ŷ haist) of his deed sonne: ¶ so begane to worships him as God, which was but a deed mā ¶ ordered his seruantes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme ¶ thorow lōge custome, this erreure was kepte as a lawe, ¶ tyrāutes cōpelled mē by violēce to honoure ymagēs. As for those ŷ were so farre of, ŷ mē might not worships them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kyng whō they wolde honoure) to the intent that with greате diligence they might worships him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular connyng of the craftesman gauē the ignoraunt also a great occasiō to worships ymagēs. For the workman wyllyng to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his connyng to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was disceaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erreure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affection, or to do some pleasure vnto kinges) ascribed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Morouer, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greате warres of ignoraunce, those many and greате plagēs called they peace.^e For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neyghboure with aduourie. And thus were all thinges myxte together: bloude, manslaughter, theft, dissimulation, corrupcion, vnfaithfulness, sedicion, periury, disquietinge of good men, vnthāfulness, defylinge of soules, chaūginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysordre of aduoutrie and vnclennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnynge and ende of all euell. For they ŷ worshipe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so much as their trust is in ŷ Idols (which haue nether sole ner vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

^a Exo. 14. d.^b Gen. 6. c.^c Gen. 7. b.^d Psal. 7. a.^e Deut. 18. b. Iere. 7. a. and 19. a.

Therefore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthly: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vnjustly to disceauē, and dyspysinge righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

The xvi. Chapter.

BUT thou (O oure God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou all thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. Yf we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is perfecte righteousness: Yee to knowe thy righteousness and power, is the rote of immortalite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable laboure) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Neuwertheles, they that loue soche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh ⁊ tempereth soft earth, laboureth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one peece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for seruice, and some contrary. But where to euery vessell serueth, that knoweth ŷ potter himself. So with his vayne laboure he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not ŷ more because he shal labourer ner because his life is shorte: but stryue to excell goldsmythes, ŷ syluer smythes ⁊ copper smythes, and taketh it for an honour to make vayne thinges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth ⁊ his life is more vyle then claye: for so much as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte oure life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be butt a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he ŷ of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboute all other.

All the enemies of thy people and ŷ holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnhappie and excedinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the Heithē to be goddes,^a which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: ⁊ as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borrowed sprete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshippeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippē beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not fele vnto them, ⁊ they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of these beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thanks vnto God.

The xvi. Chapter.

FOR these and soch other thinges haue they suffred worthy punyshment, ⁊ thorow ŷ multitude of beestes are they roted out. In steade of the which punishmentes thou hast graciously ordred thine awne people, ⁊ geuen them their desyre that they lōged for: a new ⁊ straunge taist, preparinge them^b quales to be their meate: to the intent ŷ (by the thinges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they ŷ were so gredy of meate, might be with-drawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite \hat{y} (without eny excuse) destruccïon shulde come vpō those which vsed tyrāny, α to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. ^a For whan the cruel woodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perysht thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

B Notwithstōdinge thy wrath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, \hat{y} they might be reformed, hauynge a token of saluacion, to remembre the cōmaundement of thy lawe. For he \hat{y} cōuerted, was not healed by the thinge \hat{y} he sawe, but by THE, O sauïour of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, \hat{y} it is thou, which deliuerest frō all euell. As for thē whan they were bytten with greshoppers and flyes, ^b they died, for they were worthy to perish by such: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venomous wormes ouercame thy children, for thy mercy was euer by them α helped thē. Therefore were they punyshed to remēbre thy wordes, but hastily were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulness, that they might not vse thy helpe.

C It was nether herbe ner plaster \hat{y} restored thē to health, but thy worde (o LORDE) which healeth all thinges. It is thou (o LORDE) \hat{y} hast the power of life α death: ^c thou ledest vnto deathes dore, α bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, α when his sprete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne \hat{y} soule \hat{y} is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape thy hande. For \hat{y} vngodly \hat{y} wolde not knowe \hat{y} , were punyshed by \hat{y} strēgh of thine arme: ^d with straūge waters, hailes and raynes were they persecuted, α thorow fyre were they cōsumed. For it was a wonderous thinge that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thinges: but \hat{y} worlde is \hat{y} auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was \hat{y} fyre so tame, \hat{y} the beestes which were sent to punysh \hat{y} vngodly, brent not: α \hat{y} because they shulde se α knowe, \hat{y} they were persecuted with the punyshmēt of God. And somtyme brent the fyre in the water on euery syde, \hat{y} it might destroye \hat{y} vnrighteous naciō of the earth. Againe, thou hast fed thine awne people with angels fode, ^e α sent thē bred ready from heauē (without their labour) beyng very pleasūt α well gusted. And to shewe thy riches α swetnesse vnto thy childrē, thou gauest euery one their desyre, so \hat{y} euery man might take what liked him best. But the snowe α yse abode the violēce of the fyre, α melted not: \hat{y} they might knowe, \hat{y} the fyre burninge in the hale α rayne, destroyed \hat{y} frute of \hat{y} enemies: \hat{y} fyre also forgatt his strēgh agayne, \hat{y} \hat{y} righteous might be norished. For \hat{y} creature \hat{y} serueth \hat{y} (which art \hat{y} maker) is feare in punyshinge \hat{y} vnrighteous, but it is easy α gētle to do good, vnto such as put their trust in the. Therefore dyd all thinges alter at the same tyme, α were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is \hat{y} norse of all thinges, acordinge to \hat{y} desyre of thē \hat{y} had nede therof: \hat{y} thy childrē (O LORDE) whō thou louest, ^f might knowe, \hat{y} it is not nature α the growinge of frutes \hat{y} fedeth mē, but \hat{y} it is thy worde, which preserueth thē \hat{y} put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed with the fyre, as soone as it was warmed with a litle Sonne beame, it melted: \hat{y} all men might knowe, \hat{y} thanks ought to be geuen vnto \hat{y} before \hat{y} Sonne ryse, α \hat{y} thou oughtest to be worshipped before \hat{y} daye sprynge. For \hat{y} hope of \hat{y} vnthankfull shal melt awaie as the wynter yse, α perishe as water, \hat{y} is not necessary.

The xviij. Chapter.

GREATE are thy iudgmētes (o LORDE) ^g α thy counsels can not be expressed: therefore men do erre, \hat{y} wil not be reformed with thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subieciō, ^h they were bounde with the bandes of darcknes α longe night, shutt vnder \hat{y} rofe, thinkinge to escape \hat{y} euerlastinge wisdome. And whyle they thought to be hyd in \hat{y} darcknesse of their synnes, they were scattered abroad in \hat{y} very myddest of the darck coueringe of forgetfulnes, put to horrible feare α wonderously vexed. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because \hat{y} sounde came downe and vexed them: yee many terrible and straunge visions made them afayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flāmes of the starres lightē [¶] horrible night. For there appeared vnto thē a sodane fyre, very dredeful: At [¶] which (whan they sawe nothinge) they were so afrayed, that they thought [¶] thinge which they sawe, to be the more fearfull. ^a As for the sorcery [¶] enchauntemēt [¶] they vsed, it came to derisiō, and the proude wysdome was brought to shame. For they [¶] promysed to dryue awaie the fearfulness [¶] drede frō [¶] weake soules, were sick for feare thē selues, and that with scorne. And though none of [¶] wōders feared thē, yet were they afrayed at the beestes which came vpon thē, [¶] at [¶] Hissinge of the serpētes: In so moch that with trēblinge they swowned, [¶] sayde they sawe not [¶] ayre, which no mā yet maye escape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans owne consciēce beareth recorde of his wickednes [¶] condēpneth him. And why? a vexed [¶] wounded consciēce, taketh euer cruell thinges in hāde. ^b Fearfulness is nothinge els, but a declaringe [¶] a mā seketh helpe [¶] defence, to answer for him self. And loke how moch lesse the hope is within, the more is [¶] vncertaynte of the matter, for the which he is punished. But they [¶] came in [¶] mightie night, slepte [¶] slepe [¶] fell vpon thē frō vnder [¶] frō aboue: somtyme were they afrayed thorow [¶] feare of [¶] wonders, [¶] somtyme they were so weake, [¶] they swowned withall: for an hastie [¶] sodane fearfulness came vpon thē. Afterwarde, yf eny of thē had fallē, he was kepte [¶] shutt in preson, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a village, yf he had bene an hyrd [¶] huszbandman, he suffred intolerable necessite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of darcknesse.

D Whether it were a blasyng wynde, or a swete songe of [¶] byrdes amonge the thicke braunches of the trees, or the vehemence of haistie rūnyng water, or greate noyse of [¶] fallynge downe of stones, or the playenge [¶] rūnyng of beastes whō they sawe not, or [¶] mightie noyse of roaringe beestes, or [¶] sownde [¶] answereth agayne in the hye mountaynes: it made thē swowne for very feare. For all the earth shyned with cleare light, [¶] no mā was hyndered in his laboure. Onely vpon thē there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darcknesse that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them selues the most heuy [¶] horrible darcknesse.

The xviij. Chapter.

NEUERTHELES thy sayntes had a ^a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them.) And because they suffred not [¶] same thinges, they magnified the: and they [¶] were vexed afore (because they were not hurte now) thanked the, and besought [¶] (o God) [¶] there might be a difference. Therfore had they ^c a burnynge piler of fyre to lede them in the vnkowne waye, [¶] thou gauest them the Sonne for a fre gift without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light [¶] to be put in the preson of darcknes, which kepte thy childrē in captiuyte, by whom the vncorrupte light of the lawe of [¶] worlde was for to be geuen. Whan they thought to slaye ^b the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied out, and yet preserued to be leder vnto the other) thou broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, ^c and destroydest these in the mightie water. Of that night were oure fathers certified a fore, that they knowinge vnto what oother they had geuen credēce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued [¶] health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte oure enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou callest a fore. For the righteous children of the good men offred secretly, [¶] ordred the lawe of righteousness vnto vnite: [¶] the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayes vnto [¶] father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an vconuenient voyce of the enemies, [¶] a piteous crie for childrē that were bewayled. The master and the seruāut were punyshed alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had innumerable that dyed one death.

^c Nether were [¶] lyuinge sufficient to bury [¶] deed, for in [¶] twyncklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of thē was destroyed. As oft as God helped the afore, yet wolde it not make thē beleue: but in [¶] destruccion of [¶] first borne they knewedged, that it was [¶] people of God. course, thy Allmightie worde (o LORDE) leapte downe fro heauē out of thy royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in þy myddest of þy londe þy was destroyed: ⁊ þy sharpe swerde perfournd thy straite cōmaundemēt, stādunge ⁊ fyllinge all thinges with death: yee it stode vpō þy earth ⁊ reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euell dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnawarres.

D Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyk, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed thē, shewed thē these thinges afore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished.

The tentacion of death touched the righteous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernesse there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist, and toke the batayll vpon him, brought forth the weapē of his ministracion: euen prayer and þy cōsours of recōcilinge, set himself agaynst þy wrath, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaring therby, that he was thy seruauant. For he ouercame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapēs of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembraunce of the ooth ⁊ couenaunt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wrath, and parted þy waye vnto the luyngge. And why? ^ain his longe garmēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers grauē, and thy maiesty was written in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afraied of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

The xix. Chapter.

A^a S for the vngodly, the wrath came vpō them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that (whan they had cōsented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repente, ⁊ folowe vpon them. ^cFor whan they were yet mournynge and makinge lamētacion by the graues of the deed, they deuyed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their fliegge, whom they had cast out afore with prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges þy happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punyshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormētes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fynde a straunge death.

B Thē was euery creature fashioned agayne of the new accordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, þy thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude ouershadowed their tentes, ⁊ the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so þy in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greате depe became a grene felde: where throw all þy people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous ⁊ maruelous workes. For as þy horses, so were they fedd, ⁊ leapte like lābes, prayinge the (o LORDE) which hadde deluyered them. And why? they were yet myndefull of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flyes in steade of catell, and how þy ryuer scrauled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fyszshes.

C But at the last they sawe a new creation of byrdes, what tyme as they were ^ddisceaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakeinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punyshmentes came vpon þy synners, not without the tokēs which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of þy streames: for they suffred worthely accordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably ⁊ churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought the straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also, ^eand dyd thē moch euell, that receaued thē gladly. Therefore were they punyshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with ^fsodane darknesse at the dores of the righteous: so þy euery one sought þy intrance of his dore.

D Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepe their melody: which maye easely be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lode was turned in to a watery, & y thinge that afore swamme in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cōtrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench.

Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that wēte with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despysed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Iesus Syrac.

The prologe of Iesus the sonne of Syrac unto his boke.

MANY and greate mē haue declared wysdome vnto vs out of y lawe, out of y prophetes & out of other that folowed thē. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wysdome: Therfore they that haue it & reade it, shulde not onely thē selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graundfather Iesus had geuen diligent laboure to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therein: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wysdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more vnderstandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherefore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytten in the Hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is trāslated in to another speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other bokes sounde farre other wyse, than they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeaue whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euerges, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherefore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauayle to interpret this boke. And consideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my best to performe this boke, and to brynge it vnto light: that the straigers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyue acordinge to y lawe of y LORDE.

The first Chapter.

ALL wysdome cometh of God^a the LORDE, & hath bene euer with him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred $\frac{1}{2}$ sonde of the see, $\frac{1}{2}$ droppes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heauē, $\frac{1}{2}$ bredth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the grounde of Gods wiszdome,^b which hath bene before all thinges? Wiszdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastinge. (Gods worde in the heyth is the well of wyszdome, and the euerlastinge cōmaundementes are the intraunce of her.) Vnto whom hath $\frac{1}{2}$ rote of wyszdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wyszdome bene discouered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the manyfolde entraūce of her?

33 There is one: euē the Hyest, the maker of all thinges, $\frac{1}{2}$ Allmightie, $\frac{1}{2}$ kyng of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sytteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: He hath created her thorow $\frac{1}{2}$ holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: He hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh according to his gift: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshippe and triumphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geueth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

^a 3 Re. 3. b. and 4. c. Iob 28. c. Iacobi 1. a.

The loue of God is honorable wiszdome: C loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wōderous thinges it doth.^c The feare of LORDE is the begynnyng of wyszdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shall go with the chosen wemen, and shalbe knowne of $\frac{1}{2}$ righteous and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is $\frac{1}{2}$ right Gods seruyce, that preserueth and iustifieth the hert, and geueth myrth & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shalbe happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wiszdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir giftes, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wyszdome, and geueth plenteous peace & health. He hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wyszdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto honour.

D The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wyszdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wyszdome is vnderstandinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wyszdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and the shal he haue $\frac{1}{2}$ rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstōdinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mēs lippes shal speake of his wyszdome. In the treasures of wyszdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshippe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commaundement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome & nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and lounge mekenesse, and he shal fyll the treasures therof. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duble hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marck well these things, lest thou happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discouer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregation: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

The ij. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou wilt come in to γ seruyce of God,^a stonde fast in righteousness and feare, & arme thy soule to tentacion: saddle thine hert, and be paciēt: bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shrencke not awaye, whan thou art entysed. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thy self vnto him & suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What so euer happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in heynesse, and be pacient in thy trouble.^b For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, euen so are acceptable men in the fornaue of aduersite. Beleue in God, and he shal helpe the: ordre thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and growe therin. O ye γ feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shrencke not awaye frō him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare γ LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewarde shall not be emptye. O ye that feare γ LORDE, put youre trust in him, & mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye γ feare γ LORDE, set youre loue vpō him, & youre hertes shal be lightened.

B Considre the olde generacions of men (o ye children) and marck them well:^c was there euer eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer contynued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despyse, that called faithfully vpō him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgeueth synnes in γ tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them γ seke him in γ trueth. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, & to the synner γ goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therefore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned back in to frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to vyset thē?

They that feare γ LORDE, wil not mistrust his worde: and they that loue him, ^dwyl kepe his commaundement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl seke out γ thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe.^e They that feare γ LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and hūble their soules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commaundementes, and wil be pacient, tyll they se himself) sayenge: ^fbetter it is for vs to fall in to the handes of γ LORDE, then in to the hādes of men: for his mercy is as greate as him self.

The iij. Chapter.

THE children of wysdome are a cōgregation of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Hearre me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. ^gFor the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honour-eth his father, his synnes shall be forgeuē him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: & whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father,^h shall haue a longe life: & he that is obedient for γ LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessing:ⁱ for the blessinge of γ father buyldeth vp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundations. when thy father is reprov'd, for it is no honoure vnto the, but a shame. For the worships of a mans father is his awne worships, and where the father is without honoure, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue pacience with him, & despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shall not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousness) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembered: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in \hat{y} fayre warme wether.

C He \hat{y} forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: and he that defyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme thy workes with louyng mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. ^aThe greater thou art, the more hible thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauoure in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

^bSeke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the grounde of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, ^cthinke ypo that allwaye, and be not curious in many of ^d*his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se with thine eyes, \hat{y} thinges \hat{y} are secrete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the allready, which be aboue \hat{y} capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shal perish therin.

D An harde herte shal fayre euell at \hat{y} last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prospere: & he that is frowarde of hert, wyll euer be the worse and worse.) A wicked hert shall be ladē with sorowes, and \hat{y} vngodly sinner wyll heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for \hat{y} plante of synne shal be roted out in thē. The hert of him \hat{y} hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hie thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wyse & hath vnderstādinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousness. ^eWater quencheeth burnyng fyre, & mercy reconceyleth synnes. God hath respecte vnto him \hat{y} is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

The iiii. Chapter.

MY sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes,^f and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despise not an hongrie soule, and defye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is hellesse, and withdrawe not the gift from \hat{y} nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro \hat{y} poore, \hat{y} thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of \hat{y} in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: euē he \hat{y} made him, shal heare him. Be curteous vnto \hat{y} company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe thy heade to a man of worships. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and \hat{y} with mekenesse.

B Delyuer him \hat{y} suffreth wrōge fro \hat{y} hāde of \hat{y} oppressoure,^g & be not faint harted whā thou sittest in iudgmēt. Be merciful vnto \hat{y} fatherles as a father, & be in steade of an husbāde vnto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obediēt sonne of \hat{y} Hiest, and he shal loue the more thē thy mother doth. Wisdome bretheth life in to hīr children, receaueth thē \hat{y} seke her, & wyll go before thē in \hat{y} waye of righteousness. ^a My sonne, make moch of the tyme, eschue the thinge ^y is. euell, and for thy life shame not to saye ^y trueth. ^b For there is a shame ^y bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worshipec and fauoure. ^c Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of thy neighbour in his aduersite, ^d kepe not back thy counsell whā it maye do good, nether hyde thy wysdome in hir beuty. The 6. Chapter.

^a TRUST not vnto thy riches, and saye not: tush, I haue ynough for my life. ^b (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion.) Folowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: tush, how shulde I, or who wyl cast me downe because of my workes? for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed no synnes, butt what euell hath happened me? For the Allmightie is a pacient rewarder. ^c Because thy synne is forgeue ^d ^y, be not therfore without feare, nether heape one synne vpō another. And saye not: ^e tush, the mercy of the LORDE is greate, he shal forgeue my synnes, be they neuer so many. ^f For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cōmeth downe vpon synners.

Make no tariēge to turne vnto ^g ^y LORDE, ^h ^g put not of frō daye to daie: for sodenly shal his wrath come, ⁱ and in the tyme of vengeance he shal destroye ^j ^y. ^k Trust not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge (Stonde fast in ^l ^y waye of ^m ^y LORDE) be stedfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by thy worde, and folowe the worde of peace and righteousnes. Be geile to heare ⁿ ^y worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answer with wysdome. ^o Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuinge answers. Yf thou hast vnderstandinge, shappe thy neighbour an answer: Yf no, laye thine hāde vpō thy mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vndiscrete worde, ^p and so cōfounded. Honour ^q and worshipec is in a mā wyse talkinge, but ^r ^y tōge of ^s ^y vndiscrete is his awne distrucciō. ^t Be not a preuy accuser as long as thou lyuest, and vse no slaunders with thy tonge. For shame and sorow goeth ouer the thefe, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a preuy accuser of other men, shalbe hated envyed and confounded. B Yf thou gettest a frende, proue him first,^a and be not haistie to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and wyl not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemyte, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe eny hurte by the, he telleth it out. Agayne, some frende^b is but a companion at the table, and in the daye of nede he contynueth not. Depart fro thyne enemies, yee and bewarre of thy frendes.

C A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth such one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithful frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithful frende is a medicyne of life, γ they γ feare the LORDE, shal fynde him. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal prospere with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne fro thy youth vp, so shalt thou fynde wysdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciētly for hir good frutes. For thou shalt haue but litle labour in hir worke,^d but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. O how exceedinge sharpe is wysdome to vnlearned men? an vnstedfast body wyl not remayne in her. Vnto such she is as it were a twichstone, γ he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wysdome is with him but in name, there be but few γ haue knowledge of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abyedeth euē vnto γ appearinge of God.)

D Geue eare (my sonne) receaue my doctryne, and refuse not my counsell. Put thy fote in to hir lynckes, and take hir yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shulder vnder her, beare hir patiently, and be not weery of hir bandes. Come vnto hir with thy whole hert, and kepe hir wayes with all thy power.

Seke after her, and she shalbe shewed the: and whā thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt fynde rest in her, and that shal be turned to thy greate ioye. Then shal hir fetters be a stronge defence for the, γ hir yock a glorious rayment. For the bewtye of life is in her, and hir bandes are the couplinge together of saluacion. Yee a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

E My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstādinge: and yf thou wilt applye thy mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wyse. Stonde with γ multitude of soch elders as haue vnderstandinge, and consente vnto their wysdome with thine hert: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons,^f and that the worthy sentences escape the not. And yf thou seist a man of discrete vnderstandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy fote treade vpon the steppes of his dores. Let thy mynde be vpon the commandementes of God, and be earnestly occupied in his lawes: so shal he stablish thy hert, and geue γ wysdome at thine owne desyre.

The vii. Chapter.

A DO no euell, so shall there no harme happen vnto the. Depart awaye from the thinge that is wicked, and no mysfortune shal medle with the. My sonne, sowe no euell thinges in the forowes of vnrighteousnes, so shalt thou not reape the seuenfolde. Labour not vnto man for any lordshipe, nether vnto the kynge for the seate of honoure. Iustifie not thy self before God^g (for he knoweth the hert) and desyre not to be reputed wyse in the presence of the kynge. Make no labour to be made a iudge, excepte it so were, γ thou couldest mightily put downe wickednes: for yf thou shuldest stōde in awe of γ presence of the mightie, thou shuldest fayle in geuyng sentence. Offende not in γ multitude of the cite, and put not thyself amonge the people. Bynde not two synnes together,ⁱ for in one synne shalt thou not be vnpunysed. Forsake not an olde frende, for the new shal not be like him.

A new frende is new wine: let him be olde, [¶] thou shalt drynke him with pleasure. Desyre not [¶] honoure and riches of a synner, for thou knowest not what destruccion is for to come vpon him. Delyte not thou in the thinge that the vngodly haue pleasure in: beinge sure, that the vngodly shall not be accepted vntyll their graue.

C Kepe the from the man that hath power to slaye, so nedest thou not to be afraied of death. And yf thou comest vnto him, make no fawte, lest he happen to take awaye thy life. Remembre that thou goest in the myddest of snares, and vpon the bulworkes of [¶] cite. Bewarre of thy neyghboure as nye as thou canst, and ^e medle with such as be wyse and haue vnderstandinge. Let iust men be thy gastes, let thy myrth be in the feare of God, let the remembraunce of God be in thy mynde, and let all thy talkynge be in the commaundementes of the Hyest. In the handes of craftesmen shall the workes be commended, so shal the ^f prynces of the people in the wysdome of their talkynge. A man full of wordes is perlous in his cite: and he that is temerarious and past shame in his talkinge, is to be abhorred.

The x. Chapter.

A WYSE iudge wil ordre his people with ^A discrecion, and where a man of vnderstandinge beareth rule, there goeth it well. [¶] As the iudge of the people is himself, euē so are his officers: and loke what maner of man the ruler of the cite is, such are they that dwell therein also. [¶] An vnwise kinge destroyeth his people, but where they that be in auctorite are men of vnderstandinge, there the cite prospereth.

The power of the earth is in the hande of God, and whan his tyme is, he shal set a profitable ruler vpon it. In the hande of God is the power of man, and vpō the scribes shal he laye his honoure. Heithen is to be abhorred. "Because of vn-righteous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shal be translated fro one people to another.

B There is nothinge worse then a cuvetous man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and aszshes? There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylthie doge whyle he lyueth.

And though the phisician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in conclusion it goeth after this maner: to daye a kynge, to morrow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpentes, beastes and wormes. The begynnynge of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the originall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shalbe fylled with cursinges, and at y last it shal ouer throwe him. Therefore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonoure, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

C God hath destroyed the seates of proude prynces, and sett vp the meke in their steade. God hath wythered the 'rotes of the proude Heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the 'londes of the Heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to ceasse from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of y humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether wrothfulness for mens children. The sede of men that feareth God, shalbe brought to honoure: but y sede which transgresseth the commaundementes of y LORDE shalbe shamed. He y is the ruler amōge brethren, is holdē in honoure amōge them, and he regardeth soch as feare the LORDE.

D The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God.

Despyse not thou the iust poore man, and magnifie not y rich vngodly. Greate is the iudge and mightie in honoure, yet is there none greater, then he y feareth God. Vnto y seruauant that is discrete, shal the fre do seruyce. He that is wyse and well nurtoured, wyll not grudge whan he is reformed, and an 'ignoraūt body shal not come to honoure. Be not proude to do thy worke, and dispare not in the tyme of 'aduersite. Better is he y laboureth, and hath plenteousnes of all thinges, then he y is gorgious, and wanteth bred.

E My sonne, kepe thy soule in mekenes, and geue her hir due honoure. Who shal iustifie him, that synneth agaynst himself? Who wil honoure him, that dishonoureth his owne life? The poore is honoured for his faithfulness and trueth, but y rich is had in reputacio because of his goodes. He that ordreth himself honestly in pouerte, how moch more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? And who so ordreth himself vnonestly in riches, how moch more shal he behaue himself vnonestly in pouerte?

The xi. Chapter.

THE 'wysdome of him y is brought lowe, shal lift vp his heade, and shal make him to sytt amonge greate mē. Commende not a man in his bewtye, nether despyse a man in his vtter appearaūce. The Bey is but a small beast amonge the foules, yet is hir frute exceedige swete. Be not proude of thy rayment, and exalte not thyself in the daye of thy honoure: for y workes of the Hiest onely are wonderfull: yee glorious, secrete and vnkowne are his workes. Many tyrauntes haue bene 'fayne to syt downe vpō the earth, and y vnlickly hath worne y crowne. Many mightie mē haue bene brought lowe, and the honorable haue bene deluyered in to other mens handes. 'Condemne no man, before thou haue tryed out the matter: and whan thou hast made enquisicion, then re-fourme righteously. Geue no sentēce before thou hast herde the 'cause, but first let men tell out their tayles.

B Stryue not for a matter that toucheth not thyself, and stonde not in the iudgment of synners. My sonne, medle not with many matters: and yf thou wylt be "riche, thou shalt not gett it: and though thou rennest thy waye afore, yet shalt thou not escape. some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, wāteth strēth, and hath greate pouerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp from his lowe estate, and [†]lifteth vp his heade: so that many men maruell at him, and geue honoure vnto God.

C Prosperite and aduersite,^b life and death, pouerte and riches come all of the LORDE. (Wyszdomē, nurtoure and knowlege of [‡]lawe are with God: loue and [‡]wayes of good are with him. Erroure and darcknes are made for synners: and they that exalte them selues in euell, waxe olde in euell.) The gift of God remayneth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal geue prosperite for euer. Some man is rich by luyngē nygardy, and [‡]is the porcion of his rewarde, in that he sayeth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself [‡]alone. And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, [‡]he must leaue all these thinges vnto other men, and dye himself. Stonde thou fast in thy couenant, and exercise thy self therin, and remayne in the worke vnto [‡]age. Continue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thiſe in [‡]sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and that sodenly. The blessinge of God haisteth to [‡]rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to florish and prospere. Saye not: what helpeth it me? and what shal I haue [‡]why? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? When thou art in welfare, forget not [‡]aduersite: and whan it goeth not well with the, haue a good hope, that it shal be better. For it is but a small thinge vnto God, in the daye of death to rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discouered. Prayse no body before his death, for a man shalbe knowne in his children.

E Bringē not euery man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dyuersly. Like as a partrich in a maūde, so is the hert of the proude: and like as a spy, that loketh vpon the fall of his neighbour. For he turneth good vnto euell, and slaundreth the chosen. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, [‡]an vngodly mā layeth wayte for bloude. Bewarre of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth wicked thinges, to bringe [‡]in to a perpetuall shame. Yf thou takest an aleaūt vnto [‡], he shal destroye the in vnquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes.

The xij. Chapter.

WHAN thou wylt do good, knowe to whom thou doest it, [‡]so shalt thou be greatly thanked for thy benefites. [‡]Do good vnto the righteous, and thou shalt fynde greate rewarde: though not of him, yet (no doute) the LORDE him self shal rewarde the. He stōdeth not in a good case, that is allwaye occupied in euell, [‡]geueth no almes: for the Hyest hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repētaunce. Geue thou vnto such as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shall recompense vengeance vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bred be geuen him, that he be not mightier then thy self therein. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as moch euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the Hyest hateth synners, and shal rewarde vengeance to the vngodly.

B In prosperite a frende shal not be knowne, [‡]in aduersite an enemye shal not be hyd. For whan a mā is in wealth, it greueth his enemies: but in heuynes and trouble a man shal knowe his frende. Trust neuer thine enemy, for like as an yron rusteth, so doth his wickednes. And though he make moch crouchingē and knelingē, yet kepe well thy mynde, and beware of him. Sett him not by [‡], nether let him sytt at thy right hāde: lest he turne him, gett in to thy place, take thy rowme and seke thy seate, and so thou at the last remember my wordes, and be pricked at my sayenges.

C Bynde not two synnes together, for there shal not one be vnpynded. Who wil haue pite of the charmer, that is stynged of [‡]serpēt, or of all such as come nye [‡]beastes? Euē so is it with him [‡]kepeth cōpany with a wicked mā, [‡]lappeth him self in his synnes. For a season wil he byde with the, but yf thou stomble, he tarieth not. An enemy is swete in his lippes,^a he can make many wordes & speake many good thinges: Yee he can wepe with his eies, but in his herte he ymagineth, how to throwe the in to the pytte: & yf he maye fynde oportunitie, he wil not be satisfied with bloude. Yf aduersite come vpon the, thou shalt fynde him there first: & though he pretēde to do ſ helpes, yet shal he vndermyne ſ. He shal shake his heade, & clape his handes ouer ſ for very gladnes, & whyle he maketh many wordes, he shall dysguyse his countenance.

The xiiij. Chapter.

WHO so toucheth pitch, shalbe fyled withall: ^aand he that is famylar with ſ proude, shal clothe himself with pryde. He taketh a burthen vpon him, that accompanyeth a more honorable man then him self. Therefore kepe no familiarite with one that is richer then thy self. How agree the ketell & the pott together? for yf ſ one be smytten agaynst the other, it shal be brokē. The rich dealeth vnrighteously, & threateneth withall: but ſ poore beinge oppressed and wrogeously dealt withall, suffreth scarcenesse, & geueth fayre wordes. Yf thou be for his profit, he vseth the: but yf thou haue nothinge, he shal forsake the. As longe as thou hast eny thinge of thine owne, he shal be a good felowe with thee: Yee he shal make the a bare man, and not be sory for the. Yf he haue nede of the, he shall defraude the: & (with a preuy mock) shal he put the in an hope, and geue the all good wordes, and saye: what wantest thou? Thus shal he shame ſ in his meate, vntill he haue supte the cleane vp twyse or thryse, and at the last shal he laugh the to scorne. Afterwarde, when he seyth that thou hast nothinge, he shal forsake the, and shake his heade at the.

Beware, that thou be not disceaued and brought downe in thy symplenesse. (Be not to humble in thy wysdome, lest when thou art brought lowe, thou be disceaued thorow foolishnes.) Yf thou be called of a mightie man, absent thy self, so shal he call the to him the more oft. Preasse not thou vnto him, that thou be not shott out: but go not thou farre of, lest he forgett the. Withdraw not thy self fro his speech, but beleue not his many wordes. For with moch cōmunicacion shall he tempte the, and (with a preuy mock) shall he question ſ of thy secretes. The vnmeynfull mynde of his shal marck thy wordes, he shal not spare to do ſ hurte & to put ſ in preson. Bewarre, & take good hede to thy self, for thou walkest in parell of thy ouerthrowinge.

(Now whā thou hearest his wordes, make the as though thou werest in a dreame, & wake vp. Loue God all thy life longe, & call vpon him in thy nede.) Euery beast loueth his like, euen so let euery man loue his neyghboure. All flesh wil resorte to their like, and euery man will kepe company with such as he is himself. But as ſ wolfe agreeth with the lambe, so doth the vngodly with ſ righteous. What felishippe^c shulde an holy man haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde asse is the Lyons pray in the wilderness, euen so are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, euen so doth the riche abhorre the poore. Yf a rich man fall, his frendes sett him vp agayne: but when the poore falleth, his frendes forsake him. Yf a rich mā fall in to an erreure, he hath many helpers: he speaketh proude wordes, and yet men iustifie him.

But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punyshed: yee though he speake wisely, yet can it haue no place. When the riche man speaketh, euery body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he sayeth, they prayse it vnto the cloudes. But yf the poore man speake, they saye: What felowe is this? and yf he do amysse, they shal destroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no synne in his conscience, and pouerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenance, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenance is a tokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

He ȝ is wicked vnto him self, how shulde he be goode vnto other mē? How can soch one haue eny pleasure of his goodes? There is no thinge worse, then whan one disfaouureth himself, ȝ this is a rewarde of his wickednes. Yf he do eny good, he doth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciousnes. Be not dispoyned of ȝ good daye, ȝ let not ȝ porcion of ȝ good daie ouerpas the. Shalt thou not leaue thy trauayles and labours vnto other men? In the deuydinge of the heretage geue and take, and sanctifie thy soule. Worke thou righteousnes before thy death, for in ȝ hell there is no meate to fynde. All flesh shal fade awaye like grasse, ȝ like a florishinge leaf in a grene tre. Some growe, some are cast downe: euen so is ȝ generacion of flesh and bloude: one commeth to an ende, another is borne.

C All transitory thinges shall fayle at the last, and the worker therof shal go withall. Euery chosen worke shall be iustified, and he ȝ meddleth withall, shal haue honoure therein. Blessed is the man ȝ kepeth him in wysdome, and exercyseth himself in vnderstandinge, ȝ with discrecion shal he thinke vpon the fore knowlege of God. Which considereth ȝ wayes of wysdome in his hert, hath vnderstandinge in hir secretes, goeth after her (as one that seketh hir oute) ȝ contynueth in hir wayes. He loketh in at hir windowes, ȝ herkeneth at hir dores: He taketh hir rest besyde hir house, ȝ fasteneth his stake in hir walles: He shall pitch his tent nye vnto hir hande, and in his tent shal good thinges rest for euermore: He shal sett his children vnder hir coueringe, ȝ shal dwell vnder hir braunches. Vnder hir coueringe shal he be defended from the heate, and in hir glory shal he rest.

The xv. Chapter.

HE that feareth God, wil do good: and who so kepeth the lawe, shal optayne wysdome. As an honorable mother shal she mete him, and as a vyrgin shall she receaue him. ^a With ȝ bred of life and vnderstandinge shal she fede him, and geue him the water of wholsome wysdome^b to drynke. Yf he be constant in her, he shall not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shal not come to cofucion. She shall brynge him to honoure amonge his neighbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shall she open his mouth. With the sprete of wysdome and vnderstandinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of myrth ȝ ioye vpō him, and geue him an euerlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holde vpon her, but such as haue vnderstandinge, wil mete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of trueth shall be founde in her, euen vnto the beholdinge of God.) Prayse is not semely in the mouth of ȝ vngodly, for he is not sent of ȝ LORDE. For of God commeth wysdome, ȝ the prayse shall stonde by the wysdome of God, and shal be plenteous in a faithfull mouth, and the LORDE shal geue her vnto him.

B Saye not thou: It is the LORDES faute that I am gone by, for thou shalt not do ȝ thinge that God hateth. Saye not thou: he hath caused me to go wronge, for he hath no nede of the vngodly. He hath commaunded no man to do vngodly, nether hath he geuen eny man leue to synne.

The xvi. Chapter.

A D ELYTE not thou in the multitude of vngodly children, and haue no pleasure in them, yf they feare not God. Trust not thou to their life, and regarde not their labours: for one sonne ^c y feareth God is better, the a thousande vngodly. And better it is for a man to dye without childre, the to leaue behynde him soch children as are vngodly. For by one ^d y hath vnderstandinge, maye a whole cite be vpholden, but though the vngodly be many, yet shal it be waysted thorow them. Many soch thinges hath myne eye sene, and greater thinges then these haue I herde with myne eares. ^e In the congregation of the vngodly shal a fyre burne, and amonge vnfaithfull people shal the wrath be kyndled.

B The olde giautes optayned no grace for their synnes, ^f which were destroyed, trustinge to their owne strength. Nether spared he them, ^g amoge whom Loth was a straunger: but smote them and abhorred them because of the pryde of their wordes. He had no pitie vpon them, but destroyed all the people, that were so stoute in synne. ^h And for so moch as he ouersawe not the sixe hundred thousande, that gathered them selues together in ⁱ y hardnesse of their hert: it were maruell yf one beyng hardnecked, shulde be fre. For mercy and wrath is with him: ^j he is both mightie to forgeue, and to poure out displeasure. Like as his mercy is greate, euē so is his punysshment also, he iudgeth a man accordinge to his workes. The vngodly shal not escape in his spoyle, and the longe pacience of him that sheweth mercy, shal not byde behynde. All mercy shall make place vnto euery man accordinge to the deserynge of his workes, (and after the vnderstandinge of his pilgrimage.)

Saye not thou: I wyl hyde my self from C God, for who wyl thinke vpon me from aboute? I shal not be knowne in so greate a heape of people, for what is my soule amonge so many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heauens, the depe, the earth and all that therin is, shall be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundations of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges doth no hert vnderstonde, but he vnderstandeth euery hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his storme, and the most parte of his workes are secrete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteounes? Or who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the tryenge out of men is in the fulfillynge. He that is humble of hert, thinketh vpon soch thinges: but an vnwyse and erroneous man casteth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herken thou vnto me, and lerne D vnderstadinge, and marck my wordes with thine hert: I wyl geue the a sure doctrine, and planely shal I enstrucke the. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynninge, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnysed his workes from euerlastinge, and their begynnynge accordinge to their generacions. None of the hyndered another, nether was eny of them disobedient vnto his worde. After this, God looked vpon the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of luyng beasts hath he couered the grounde, and they all shalbe turned vnto earth agayne.

filled them with instruccïon & vnderstandinge. He created for them also the knowlege of the sprete, filled their hert with vnderstandinge, and shewed them good and euell. He sett his eye vpon their hertes, declaringe vnto them his greate and noble workes: (that they shulde prayse his holy name together, reioyse of his wonders, & be tellinge of his noble actes.)^a Besydes this, he gaue them instruccïon, and the lawe of life for an heretage. He made an euerlastinge couenaut with them, and shewed them his righteousnes & iudgmentes. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares herde the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: beware of all vnrighteous thinges. He gaue every man also a commaundement concernynge his neyghboure.

B Their waies are euer before him, and are not hyd from his eyes. ^b He hath sett a ruler vpon every people, but Israel is ^γ LORDES porcion. At the last shall he awake, ^d & rewarde every man vpon his heade as he hath deserved, and shal turne them together in to the nethermost partes of the earth. ^e But vnto them that wyll repent, he hath geuē the waye of righteousnes. As for such as be weake, he comforteth thē, suffreth them, and sendeth them the porcion of ^γ verite. O turne then vnto the LORDE, forsake thy synnes, make thy prayer before the LORDE, do the lesse offence, turne agayne vnto the LORDE, forsake thine vnrighteousnes, be an vtter enemy to abhominacion (lerne to knowe the righteousnes and iudgmentes of God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth for the ^γ in the prayer of the most hye God. Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde, with such as be lyuinge and geue thanks vnto God.)

C ^f Who wil prayse the LORDE in the hell? Abyde not thou in the erreure of the vngodly, but geue him thākes before death. As for ^γ deed, thankfulness perisheth from him as nothinge. Geue thou thankes in thy life, yee whyle thou art lyuyng & whole shalt thou geue thanks, and prayse God and reioyse in his mercy. O how greate is the louynge kyndnesse of the LORDE, and his mercifull goodnes vnto such as turne vnto him? For all thinges maye not be in man: ^γ why? the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare thē the Sonne? yet shal it fayle. Or what is more wicked, then the thinge that flesh and bloude hath ymagined? and that same shall be reprobud. The LORDE seyth the power of the hye heauen, and all are but earth and aszshes.

The xliij. Chapter.

HE that lyueth for euermore, made all thinges together. ^g God onely is righteous, & remayneth a victorious kynge for euer. ^h Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him? Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes? Who shal declare the power of his greatnesse? Or, who will take vpon him to tell out his mercy? As for the wonderous workes of the LORDE, there maye nothinge be taken from them, nothinge maye be put vnto them, nether maye the grounde of them be founde out. But whan a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour. What is man? Wherto is he worth? What good or euell can he do? ⁱ Yf the nombre of a mans dayes be almost an hundreth yeaere, it is moche.

J Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto ^j see, and as a grauell stone is in comparison of the sonde: ^k so are these few yeaeres to the dayes euerlastinge. Therefore is ^γ LORDE pacient with them, and poureth out his mercy vpon them. He sawe and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginations of their harte, that they were euell: therfore heaped he vp his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waie of righteousnes. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his neyghboure: but ^γ mercy of God is vpon all flesh. He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourturith: yee euen as a shepherde turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chastenyng, nourtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto

¶ My sonne, whan thou doest good, make no grudging at it: and what so euer thou geuest, speake no discomfortable wordes. Shal not the dew coole the heate? Euen so is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frendly worde a good honest gift? ^b but a gracious man geueth them both. A foole shal cast a man in the tethe, and that roughly, and a gift of the nygarde putteth out ^c eyes. Get the righteousnes before thou come to iudgmēt: Lerne before thou speake, and go to phisick or euer thou be sick: ^d examen and iudge thy self, before the iudgment come, and so shalt thou fynde grace in the sight of God. Humble thy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conuersacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be reformed vnto death, for the rewarde of God endureth for euer. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one ^e tempteth God. Thynke vpon the wrathfull indignacion that shalbe at the ende, and the houre of vengeaunce, whā HE shal turne awaie his face. ^f Whan thou hast yough, remembre the tyme of hunger: and whan thou art rych, thynke vpon the tyme of pouerte and scarcenese.

¶ From the mornynge vntyll the euenynge the tyme is chaunged, and all soch thynges are soone done in ^g sight of God. A wyse man feareth God in all thinges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wyszdome, and he that fyndeth her, maketh moch of her. They that haue had vnderstandinge, haue dealt wysely in wordes, haue vnderstonde the trueth and righteousnes, and haue sought out wyse sentēces and iudgements. ^h Folowe not thy lustes, but turne ⁱ from thine owne will. For yf thou geuest thy soule hir desyres, it shal make thine enemies to laugh the to scorne. Take not thy pleasure in greute voluptuousnes, and medle not to moch withall. Make not to greate cheare of the thinge that thou hast wonne by auantage: lest thou fall in to pouerte, and haue nothinge in thy purse.

The xii. Chapter.

LABOURYNGE man that is geuen vnto dronckennes, shall not be riche: and he that maketh not moch of small thynges, shal fall by litle and litle. ^a Wyne and women make wyse men rēnagates, and put men of vnderstādinge to reprove: and he that accompanieth aduouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and wormes shall haue him to heretage, yee he shall be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe roted out of the nombre. ^b He that is haistie to geue credence, is light mynded, and doth agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be reformed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quencheth wickednes. (He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in wickednes, shalbe punyshed.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish worde twyse, and thou shalt not be hyndered. Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foo, and yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herken vnto the and marck the: and whan he fyndeth oportunitie, he shall hate the. ^c Yf thou hast herde a worde agaynst thy neyghboure, lett it be deed within the: and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foole trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arowe shott in a dogges thye, so is a worde in a foolles hert. ^d Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignoraunt, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neyghboure, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

Tell thy neyghboure his faute, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credēce to euery worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. ^e For what is he, ^f yf hath not offended in his tonge? Geue thy neyghboure warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORDE. The feare of God is all wyszdome, and he that is a right wyse man kepeth the lawe. synners is no good vnderstandinge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion ⁊ a blasphemynge of wysdome. A symple man of small vnderstandinge that feareth God, is better then one that hath moch wysdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the Hyest.

D A craftye sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he wraysteth the open and manifest lawe. A wicked man can behaue himself humbly, and can douke with his heade, and yet is he but a disceauer within. He hydeth his face,^a and disguyseth it: ⁊ because he shulde not be knowne, he preuenteth the.

And though he be so weake that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye fynde oportunitie, he shall do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstandinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenance. A mans garment, laughter ⁊ goynge, declare what he is.

The rr. Chapter.

SOME man reprooueth his neyghboure oft tymes, but not in due season: 'Agayne, some man holdeth his tonge, and he is wyse and discrete. It is moch better to geue warnynge and to reprove, then to beare euell will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserued from hurt and destruccion. Like as whan a chamberlayne thorow desyre and lust defyleth a mayden, euen so is it with him that vseth violence and vnrighteousnes in lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man is reproved, to shewe openly his repentaunce? for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man kepeth sylence, and is founde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tonge, because he hath not the vnderstandinge of the language: and some man kepeth sylence, waytinge a conuenient tyme.^d A wyse man wyll holde his tonge tyll he se oportunitie, but a wanten and an vn discrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that vseth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he that taketh auctorite vpō him vnrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: Agayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: Againe, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall for beyng to proude, and some commeth to worships from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle pryce, and must paye for it seuenfolde.

B A wyse man with his wordes maketh him self to be loued, but the fauours of fooles shalbe poured out. The gift of the vn wyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seuen folde. He shal geue litle, ⁊ saye he gaue moch: he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, to morrow he axeth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I haue no frende, I haue no thanke for all my good dedes: yee euen they that eate my bred, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorne? He taketh a more perlous fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the grounde: euen so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is vntaught, are many vnconuenient and vnnete wordes. A wyse sentence shall not be alowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

C Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherewithall, and in his rest he shall be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an vnwyse bodyes sake destroyeth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vndoo himself.) Some man promiseteth his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemye of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shall it be euer in the mouth of the vnwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruccion to heretage. The conditions of lyers are vn honest, and their shame is euer with them.

D A wyse man shall brynge himself to honoure with his wordes, and he that hath vnderstandinge shall be sett by amonge greate men. He that tylleth his londe, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousnes, shall be exalted, ⁊ he that pleaseth greate men, shall escape moch euell. The xxi. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou hast synned, do it no more:^a but praye for thy foresynnes, that they maye be for geuen the. Fle from synne, euen as from a serpent: for yf thou commest to nye her, she wyll byte the. The teth therof are as the teth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged swerde, which maketh such woundes that they can not be healed.

Stryfe and wrongeous dealinge shall waiste awaye a mans goodes, & thorow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe roted out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth,^c and commeth vnto the eares, and his vengeance (or defence) shall come, and y^e haistely. Who so hateth to be reformed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyl remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne afarre of by his tonge, but he that hath vnderstondinge, perceaueth that he shal haue a fall.

B Who so buyldeth his house with other mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the^d vngodly is like stubble gathered together, their ende is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that kepeth the lawe, wyll holde fast the vnderstandinge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wyszdome. He that is not wyse, wyll not be taught in good: but the vnwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstodinge. The knowledge of the wyse shall flowe like water that renneth ouer, and his counsell is like a fountayne of life.

C The hert of a foole is like a brokē vessell, he can kepe no wyszdome. Whan a man of vnderstondinge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commend it, and make moch of it. But yf a voluptuous man heare it, he shall haue no pleasure therin, but cast it behynde his back. The talkyng of a foole is like an heuy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a doute is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal pondre his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wyszdome vnto a foole: As for the knowlege of the vnwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him y^e hath no vnderstandinge, euen as fetters aboute his fete, and like mannicles vpon his right hande.^e A foole listeth vp his voyce with laughter, but a wyse man shall scarce laugh secretly.

D Lernynge is vnto a wyse man a fewell of golde, and like an armlett vpō his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neighbours house, but one that hath experience, shall be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyll pepe in at y^e wyndow in to the house, but he that is well nourtured, wyll stonde without. A foolish man stondest herkenynge at the dore, but he that is wyse, wyll be ashamed.

The lippes of the vnwyse wyllbe tellynge foolish thinges, but y^e wordes of such as haue vnderstandinge, shalbe weyed in the balance. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. Whan the vngodly curseth the blasphemmer, he curseth his owne soule.^f A preuy accuser of other men shal defyle his owne soule, and be hated of euery man: (but he that kepeth his tonge and is discrete, shall come to honoure.)

The xxiij. Chapter.

A SLOUTHFULL body is moulded of a stone of claie: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtured sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe litle regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husbände: but she that commeth to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heynes. A daughter that is past shame, dishonoureth both hir father and hir huszbande: the vngodly shal regarde her, but they both shal despise her. the playenge of Musick is not mete where heynes is, euen so is the correcciō & doctryne of wyszdome euer vnpleasaunt vnto fooles.

B Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one that gleweth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a taylor to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a mā out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wyszdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one ŷ is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his tayle, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because the light fayleth him: euē so let mē mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstandinge. Make but litle wepinge because of the deed: for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. ^aSeuen dayes do men mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the vnwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

^c Talke not moch with a foole, and go not with him that hath no vnderstandinge. Bewarre of him, lest it turne the to trauayle, ⁊ thou shalt not be defyled with his synne. Depart from him, and thou shalt fynde rest, ⁊ shalt not be drawē back in to his foolishnes. What is heuyer then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? ^bSōde, salt ⁊ a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an vnwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of wodd bounde together in the foundation of the house can not be lōwse, euē so is it with ŷ hert ŷ is established in ŷ thought of coucell. The thought of the wyse, shal nether feare ner be offended at eny tyme.

^d Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter house, ⁊ an hye buyldinge, maye not abyde ŷ wide ⁊ storme: euē so is a fooles hert afraid in his ymaginacion: he feareth at euery thinge, and can not endure. He that nyppeth a mans eye, bryngeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth ŷ meanyng ⁊ thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: ⁊ he ŷ blasphemeth his frēde, breaketh ŷ frēdshipec. though thou drewest a swerde at thy frende, yet dispayre not, for thou mayest come agayne to thy frende. Yf he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blasphemeth him, dysdayne him, opē his secretes and wounde him tratorously: for all soch thinges shal dryue awaye a frende.

^e Be faithfull vnto thy neghboure in his pouerte, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abyde stedfast vnto him in ŷ tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be heyre with him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the ouen before ŷ fyre, euen so euell wordes, rebukes and threatenynge go before bloudsheddinge. Be not ashamed to defende thy frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shulde do me harme. Who so euer heareth it, shal beware of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, ⁊ a sure seale vpon my lippes, ŷ I fall not with thē, ⁊ ŷ my tonge destroye me not?

The xxiij. Chapter.

O LORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginaciō ⁊ counsell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprofe. Who wyll kepe my thought with ŷ scourge, and the doctryne of wyszdome in myne herte? that he spare not myne ignoraunce, that I fall not with them, lest myne ignoraunces increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes excede not: lest I fall before myne enemies, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father ⁊ God of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all voluptuousnes fro me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vncleennes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshamefast and obstinate mynde.

Hear me (o ye children) I will geue you a doctryne, how ye shal ordre youre mouth: who so kepeth it, shal not perish thorow his lippes, ner be hurt thorow wicked workes (As for the synner, he shalbe taken in his owne vanite: he that is proude and cursed, shal fall therin.) ^aLet not thy mouth be accustomed with swearinge, for in it there are many falles. Let not the namyng of God be continually in thy mouth: for like as a seruauit which is oft punyshed can not be without some sore, euen so what so euer he be ŷ sweareth and nameth God, shal not be cleane poured fro synne. A man that vseth moch swearinge, shalbe fylled with wickednes, and the plage shal neuer go from his house. Yf he begyle his brother, his faute shalbe vpon him: yf he knowlege not his synne, he maketh a dubble offence: and yf he sweare in vayne, he shall not be founde righteous, for his house shalbe full of plagis.

a palme tre in Cades, & as a rose plāted in Iericho: As a fayre olyue tre in the felde, & am exalted like as a plantayne tre by the water syde. I haue geuen a smell in the stretes, as f Cynamon and Balme, that hath so good a sauoure: yee a swete odoure haue I geuen, as it were Myrre of the best.

C I haue made my dwellinges to smell as it were of rosyn, Galbanum, of Clowes and Incense, & as Libanus whan it is not hewē downe, & mine odoure is as the pure Balme. As the Terebynte haue I stretched out my braunches, and my braunches are the braunches of honoure and louynge fauoure. ^aAs f vyne haue I brought forth frute of a swete sauoure, and my floures are f frute of honoure and riches. I am the mother of bewtye, of loue, of feare, of knowlege and of holy hope. In me is all grace of life and trueth: ^bIn me is all hope of life and vertue. O come vnto me, all ye that be desyrus of me, and fyll youre selues with my frutes: for my sprete is sweter then hony, & so is my inheritaunce more then the hony combe: the remembraunce of me endureth for euermore. They that eate me, shal haue the more hunger: and they that drynke me, shal thyrste the more. Who so herkeneth vnto me, shal not come to confucion: and they that worke in me, shal not offende. They that make me to be knowne, shal haue euerlasting life.

All these thinges are the boke of life, the couenaunt of the Hyest, and the knowlege of the trueth. ^cMoses commaunded the lawe in the preceptes of righteousnes for an heritage vnto the house of Iacob,^d and cōmitted f promyses vnto Israel (Out of Dauid his seruāūt HE ordered to raise vp a most mightie kinge, syttinge in the seate of honoure for euermore.) ^eThis fylleth with wyszdome like as the floude of Phison, & as f floude of Tigris, whan the new frutes are a growinge.

D This bringeth a plenteous vnderstandinge, like Euprates: ^f& fylleth it vp, as Iordane in the time of haruest. This maketh nurtoure to breake forth as the light, & as the water Gihon in f haruest. The first hath not knowne her perfectly, nomore shal the last seke out f grounde of her. For hir thought is fuller thē the see, and hir counsell is pro-founder then the greate depe.

I wyszdome haue cast out floudes. I am as a greate waterbroke out of f ruer. I am as the ryuer Dorix, and as a water condyte am I come out of the garden of pleasure. I sayde: I wyl water the garden of my yonge plantes, and fyll the frute of my byrth. So my waterbroke became exceedinge greate, and my ryuer approached vnto the see. For I make doctryne to be vnto all mē as light as the fayre mornynge, and I shall make it to be euer the clearer. (I will pearse thorow all the lower partes of the earth, I wyll loke vpon all such as be a slepe, and lighten all thē that put their trust in the LORDE.) I shal yet poure out doctrine, like as prophecy, and leaue it vnto such as seke after wyszdome, and their generacions shal I neuer fayle, vnto the holy euerlastinge worlde. Beholde, how that I haue not laboured for my self onely, ^gbut for all them f seke after f self.

The xrb. Chapter.

THRE thinges there are, f my sprete A fauoureth, ^hwhich be also a lowed before God and men: The vnyte of brethren, the loue of neighbours, and man and wyfe that agree well together.ⁱ

Thre thinges there be which my soule hateth, and I vtterly abhorre the life of them: A poore man that is proude. A rich mā that is a lyar,^k and an olde body that doteth and is vnchaste.

Yf thou hast gathered nothings in thy youth, what wylt thou fynde thē in thine age? O how pleasaut a thinge is it, whā gray headed men are discrete, & whan the elders can geue good counsell? O how cōly a thinge is wyszdome vnto aged men? yee vnderstandinge and counsell is a glorious thinge. The crowne of olde men is to haue moch experience, & f feare of God is their worshippe.

JThere be ix. thinges, which I haue iudged in my hert to be happie, and the tenth wil I tell forth vnto men with my tonge. A man f whyle he lyueth, hath ioie of his children, and seith f fall of his enemies. Well is him, that dwelleth ^lwith an houswife of vnderstōd-inge, and that hath not fallen with his tonge, and \hat{y} hath not bene faine to serue such as are vnmete for him. Wel is him, \hat{y} fyndeth a faithfull frende: τ wel is him, which talketh of wysdome to an eare \hat{y} heareth him. O how greate is he, \hat{y} fyndeth wysdome τ knowlege? Yet is he not aboute him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath sett itself aboute all thinges. Blessed is \hat{y} man, vnto whō it is graunted to haue the feare of God. Vnto whō shal he be lickened, \hat{y} kepeth it fast? The feare of God is the begynnyng of his loue, and the begynnyng of faith is to cleue fast vnto it. The heuynes of the hert is all the punyshment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboute all. All punyshment τ plage is nothinge in comparison of the plage of the hert, euē so all wickednes is nothinge to the wickednes of a woman.

What so euer happeneth vnto a man, is nothinge in comparison of it, \hat{y} his euell willers do vnto him: and all vengeance is nothinge to the vengeance of the enemye. There is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the serpet, and there is no wrath aboute \hat{y} wrath of a woman. "I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe house with a wicked wyfe. The wickednesse of a woman chaungeth hir face, she shal moffell hir cōtenaunce as it were a Beer, τ as a sack shall she shewe it amonge the neighbours. Hir husbände is brought to shame amōge his neighbours, τ whā he heareth it, it maketh him to sighe. All wickednes is but litle to the wickednes of a woman, \hat{y} porcion of the vngodly shal fall vpon her.

Like as to clymme vp a sondy waye is to \hat{y} fete of the aged, euē so is a wife full of wordes to a still quyet man. ^aLoke not to narrowly vpon the bewtye of a woman, lest thou be prouoked in desyre towards her. The wrath of a woman is dishonoure and greate confusio. Yf a woman gett the mastrie, then is she contrary to hir huszbande. A wicked wyfe maketh a sory hert, an heuy countenance and a deed wounde. ^cOf the woman came \hat{y} begynnyng of synne, and thorow her we all are deed. Geue thy water no passage, no not a litle, nether geue a wicked woman hir will. Yf she walke not after thy hande, she shall confounde the in the sight of thy enemies. Cut her of then from thy flesh, that she do not staye aboue the.

The xvi. Chapter.

HAPPIE is the man that hath a vertuous ^a wyfe, for the nōbre of his yeares shalbe dubble. An honest woman maketh hir huszbande a ioyfull man, τ she shall fyll \hat{y} yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which shalbe geuen for a good porcion vnto soch as feare God. Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye haue euer a mery hert, τ a chearful countenance. There be thre thinges \hat{y} my hert feareth, and my face is afayed of the fourth. Treason in a cite, a sedicious people, and noysome tonges, all these are heuier then the death. But whan one is gelous ouer his wife, it bryngeth payne and sorowe vnto the hert: and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a scourge of the tonge. Whan one hath an euell wife, it is euen as whan an vnlike pare of oxen must drawe together: he that getteth her, getteth a scorpion. ^cA dronken woman is a greате plage, for she can not couer hir owne shame.

The whordome of a woman maye be ^b knowne in the pryde of hir eyes and eyellyddes. ^cYf thy daughter be not shamefast, holde her straitly, lest she abuse herself thorow ouermoch liberte. Bewarre of all the dishonesty of hir eyes, and maruell not yf she do agaynst the. Lik as one that goeth by the waye and is thyrstie, so shall she open hir mouth, and drynke of euery nexte water that she maye gett.

By euery hedge shal she syt her downe, τ opē hir quyver against euery arowe. A lounyng wyfe reioyseth hir huszbande, and fedeth his bones with hir wysdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye nothinge be compared.

An honest and manerly woman is a gyft aboute other giftes, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule it self. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hye heauen of \hat{y} LORDE, so is a vertuous wife \hat{y} bewtye of all hir house. Like as the cleare light is vpon \hat{y} holy cadelstick, so is the bewtye of the face vpō an honest body. ^dLike as the goldē pilers are vpon the sockettes of syluer, so are the fayre legges vpon a woman that hath a cōstant mynde. (Perpetuall are the fōudacions that be laied vpon a whole stonye rocke, so are ^g commaundementes of God vpon an holy woman.)

D There be two thinges ^h greue my hert, and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon me. When an experte man of warre suffreth scarsenes and pouerte, Whan men of vnderstandinge and wysdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteousnes vnto synne. Who so doth soch, the LORDE hath prepared him vnto the swerde. There be two maner of thinges, which me thynke can not lightly kepe him from wronge, nether a tauerner himself from synne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

A BECAUSE of pouerte haue many one offended: and he that seketh to be riche, turneth his eyes asyde. Like as a nale in the wall sticketh fast betwixte two stones, euen so doth synne sticke betwixte ^h byer and the seller. Yf he holde him not diligently in ^h feare of the LORDE, his house shall soone be ouerthrowne. Like as whan one sifteth, the fylthynges remayneth in the syue: So, remayneth there some vnclane thinge in the thought of man. The ouen proueth the potters vessell, so doth ^a tentacion of trouble trye righteous men. The tre of the felde is knowne by his frute, so is the thought of mas hert knowne by his wordes. Prayse no mā excepte thou haue harde him, for a man is knowne by his wordes. Yf thou folowest righteousness, thou shalt get her, and put her vpon ^h as a fayre garment. (And thou shalt dwell with her, and she shall defende the for euer, and in ^h daye of knowlege thou shalt fynde stedfastnesse.) The byrdes resorte vnto their like, so doth the trueth turne vnto them that be occupied withall. The lyon wayteth for ^h praye: so do the synnes lurke vpon the workes of wickednes. The talkinge of him that feareth God, is nothinge but wysdome: as for a foole, he chaungeth as ^h Moone. Yf thou be amonge the vndiscrete, kepe thy worde to a conuenient ^b tyme, but amonge soch as be wyse, speake on hardely. The talkinge of fooles is abhominaciō, and their sporte is volupetuousnesse and mysnurtoure. ^c Moch swearynge maketh the hayre to stonde vp, and to stryue with soch, stoppeth the eares.

The stryfe of the proude is bloudsheddynge, ^g their blasphemynge is heuy to heare. ^d Who so discouereth secretes, leseth his credence, and fyndeth no frende after his will. Loue thy frende, and bynde thyself in faithfulness with him: but yf thou bewrayest his secretes, thou shalt not get him agayne: For like as the mā is that destroyeth his enemye so is he also that dealeth falsly in the frendshipe of his neyghoure.

Like as one that letteth a byrde go out of his honde, can not take her agayne: Euen so thou, yf thou geue ouer thy frende, thou canst not get him agayne: Yee thou cāst not come by him, for he is to farre of. He is vnto the as a Roo escaped out of the snare, for his soule is wounded. As for woundes, they maye be bounde vp agayne, and an euell worde maye be reconcyled: but who so bewrayeth the secretes of a frende, there is no more hope to be had vnto him.

He that ^a wyncketh with the eyes, ymagineth some euell, and no man shal take him from it. Whan thou art present, he shal hylie commend and prayse thy wordes: but at the last he shall turne his taylor, and slaūder thy sayenge. Many thinges haue I hated, but nothinge so euell, for the LORDE himself also abhorreth soch one.

Who so casteth a stone an hie, it shal fall vpon his owne heade: ^f and he that smyteth with gyle, woundeth himself. Who so diggeth a ^e pytt, shal fall therin: and he that layeth a snare, shal be taken in it himself. Who so geueth a wicked noysome counsell, it shall come vpon himself, and he shall not knowe from whēce. The proude blaspheme and are scornfull, but vengeance lurketh for them as a lyon. They that reioyse at the fall of ^h righteous, shal be taken in ^h snare, anguysh of hert shall consume them before they dye. Anger and rigorousnes are two abhominable thinges, and ^h vngodly hath them both vpon him.

thy neighbour the hurte that he hath done thee, and so shal thy synnes be forgeuen the also, whan thou prayest. A man that beareth hatred agaynst another, how darre he desyre forgeuenesse of God? He that sheweth no mercy to a mā which is like himself, how darre he axe forgeuenesse of his synnes? Yf he that is but flesh, beareth hatred and kepeth it, who wyl intreate for his synnes? Remembre the ende, ⁊ let enemyte passe, which seketh death and destruccion, and abyde thou in ⁊ commaundementes. Remembre ⁊ commaundement, so shalt thou not be rigorou ouer thy neighbour. Thinke vpō the couenaunt of ⁊ Hyest, and forgeue thy neighbours ignoraūce. ^aBeware of strife, and thou shalt make ⁊ synnes fewer. For an angrie man kyndleth variaunce, and the vngodly disquyeteth frēdes, and putteth discorde amonge them that be at peace. The more wodd there is, the more vehement is the fyre: and the ^amightier ⁊ men be, the greater is the wrath: and the longer the strife endureth, the more it burneth.

^cAn haistie brawlinge kyndleth a fyre, and an haistie strife sheddeth bloude. Yf thou blowe the sparke: it shal burne: Yf thou spytt vpō it, it shal go forth, and both these go out of thy mouth. The ^aslaunderer and dubble tōgued is cursed, for many one that be frendes setteth he at variaunce. The thirde tonge hath disquieted many one, and dryuen them from one londe to another. Stronge cities hath it broken downe, and ouerthrowne the houses of greate men. The thirde tōge hath cast out many an honest woman, and robbed them of their labours. Who so harkeneth vnto soch, shal neuer fynde rest, and neuer dwell safely. The stroke of ⁊ rod maketh yedders, but the stroke of the tonge smyteth the bones in sunder. There be many that haue perished with the swerde, but many mo thorow the tonge.

^dWel is him that is kepte frō an euell tonge, ⁊ commeth not in ⁊ anger therof: which draweth not the yock of soch, and is not boide in the bondes of it. For the yock therof is of yron, and ⁊ bonde of it of stele. The death therof is a very euell death: hell were better for one, then soch a tonge. But the fyre of it maye not oppresse them that feare God, and ⁊ flamme therof maye not burne thē. Soch as forsake the LORDE, shal fall therein: and it shal burne them, and no man shal be able to quench it. It shal fall vpon thē as a Lyō, and deuoure them as a leparde. Thou hedgest thy goodes with thornes: why doest thou not rather make dores and barres for thy mouth? Thou weiest thy golde and syluer: why doest thou not weye thy wordes also vpon the balance? Bewarre, that thou slyde not in thy tonge, and so fall before thine enemies, that laye wayte for the.

The xxii. Chapter.

WHO so wil shewe mercy, let him lende vnto his ^aneighbour: and he that is able, let him kepe the commaundement. Lende vnto thy neighbour in tyme of his nede, and paye thou thy neighbour agayne in due season. Kepe thy worde, ⁊ deale faithfully with him, ⁊ thou shalt allwaye fynde the thinge ⁊ is necessary for the. There haue bene many, that whan a thinge was lent them, rekened it to be founde: and made them trauaile and laboure, that had helped them. Whye they receaue eny thinge, they kysse the handes of soch as geue them, and for their neighbours good they hūble their voyce. But whan they shulde paye agayne they kepe it back, and geue euell wordes, and make many excuses by reason of the tyme: ⁊ though he be able, yet geueth he scarce the half agayne, and rekeneth ⁊ other to be founde. And yf he witholde not his moneye, yet hath he an enemye of him, and that vndererued.

He payeth him with cursinge and rebuke ^band geueth him euell wordes for his good dede. There be many one which are not glad for to lende, not because of euell, but they feare to lese the thinge that they lende. Yet haue thou pacience with the symple, and withholde not mercy from him. Helpe the poore for the commaundementes sake, and let him not go empyte from the because of his necessite. Lese thy money for thy brother and neighbours sake, and burye it not vnder a stone, wher it rusteth and corrupeth. Gather thy ^atreasure after the commaundement of ⁊ Hyest, and so shal it bringe the more profit thē golde. Laye vp the almes in the hande of the poore, and it shal kepe the from all euell.^a (A mans allmes is as a purse with him, and shal kepe a mans fauoure as the apple of an eye: and afterwarde shall it aryse, & paye euery man his rewarde vpon his heade.) It shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies, better then the shyld of a giaunte, or speare of the mightie.

C A good honest mā is suertye for his neghbour, but a wicked persone letteth him come to shame. Forget not the frendshipe of thy suertye, for he hath geuē his soule for ꝑ. The vngodly despyseth ꝑ good dede of his suertye, & the vnthankfull and ignoraunt leaueth his suertie in daunger. (Some man promyseth for his neghbour: & when he hath lost his honesty, he shal forsake him.) Suertishipe hath destroyed many a ryche man, & remoued them as the wawes in ꝑ see. Mightie people hath it dryuen awaye, and caused the to wandre in straunge countrees. An vngodly man transgressynge the commaundement of the LORDE, shal fall in to an euell suertishipe: and though he force himself to get out, yet shal he fall in to iudgment. Helpe thy neghbour out after thy power, and beware, ꝑ thou thy self fall not in soch dett. ^bThe chefte thinge that kepeth in the life, is water and bred, clothinge and lodginge, to couer the shame.

D Better is it to haue a poore lyuynge in a mans owne house,^c the delicate fayre amōge the straunge. ^dBe it litle or moch ꝑ thou hast, holde the contēt withall (& thou shalt not be blamed as a vagabounde:) for a myserable life is it, to go from house to house: and where a mā is fremde, he darre not opē his mouth. Though one be lodged, and haue meate and drynke, yet shall he be taken as vnworthy, & heare many bytter rough wordes, namely thus: Go thy waye thou straunger, and prepare a table (for thy self) and fede me also of that thou hast. Awaye thou straunger (so, that he regardeth his honour nomore) my brother commeth in to my house, & so he telleth him the necessite of his house. These thinges are heuy to a man that hath vnderstandinge: namely, the forbyddinge of ꝑ house, & that the lēder casteth him in the teth.

The xxx. Chapter.

WHO so loueth his childe, holdeth him A still vnder correccion,^e that he maye haue ioye of him afterwarde (and that he grope not after his neghbour's dores.) ^fHe ꝑ teacheth his sonne, shall haue ioye in him, & nede not be ashamed of him amōge his aquantaūce. Who so enfourmed & teacheth his sonne, greueth ꝑ enemie, and before his frendes he maye haue ioye of him. Though the father dye, yet is he as though he were not deed: for he hath left one behynde him that is like him. In his life he sawe him, & had ioye in him, & was not sory in his death, (nether was he ashamed before ꝑ enemies.) For he left behinde him an auenger agaynst his enemies, and a good doer vnto the frendes. For the life of childrē he shal binde the woundes together, and his hert is greued at euery crye. An vntamed horse wylbe harde, and a wanton childe wylbe wylfull. Yf thou brynge vp thy sonne delicatly, he shal make ꝑ afraied: and yf thou playe with him, he shal brynge the to heuynes. Laugh not with him, lest thou wepe with him also, and lest thy teth be sett on edge at the last.

B Geue him not liberte in his youth, & excuse not his foly.^g Bow downe his neck whyle he is yonge, hytt him vpon the sydes whyle he is yet but a childe, lest he waxe stubburne, & geue no more force of ꝑ (and so shalt thou haue heuynes of soule.) Teach thy childe, & be diligēt therin, lest it be to thy shame. Better is the poore beyng whole & stronge, the a man to be riche, & not to haue his health. Health and welfare is aboue all golde, and an whole body aboue all treasure. There is no riches aboue a sounde body, & no ioye aboue the ioye of the hert. Death is better then a wretched life, or contynuall sicknes. The good thinges ꝑ are put in a close mouth, are like as whan meate is layed vpon ꝑ graue.

C What good doth the offeringe vnto an Idoll? For he can nether eate, taist ner smell.^h Euē so is it also with the riche, whom God maketh seke: he seith it with his eyes, & groneth thereafter, and is euen as a gelded man, that lyeth with a vyrgin and sygheth. ⁱGeue not ouer thy mynde in to heynes, ⁊ vexe not thy self in thine owne counsell. The ioye ⁊ chearfulnes of the hert is the life of man, and a mans gladnes is the prolonginge of his dayes. Loue thine owne soule, and comforte thine hert: as for sorow and heynes, dryue it farre from ⁊, for heynes hath slayne many a man, and bryngeth no profit. Zele and anger shorten the dayes of the life: carefules and sorow brynge age before the tyme. Vnto a mery hert euery thinge hath a good taist, that he eateth.

The rrii. Chapter.

TRAUAYLE and carefules for riches taketh awaye the slepe, and maketh the flesh to cōsume. When one lyeth and taketh care, he waketh euer vp, like as greate sicknes breaketh the slepe. The rich hath greate labour in gatheringe his riches together, and then with the pleasure of his riches he taketh his rest ⁊ is refreshed. But who so laboureth and prospereth not, he is poore: and though he leaue of, yet is he a begger. He that loueth riches, shall not be iustified: and who so foloweth corrupciō, shal haue ynough therof. Many one are come in greate mysfortune by the reason of golde, ⁊ haue founde their destruction before them. It is a tre of fallynge vnto them that offre it vp, and all such as be foolish fall therin. Blessed is the rich, which is founde without blemish, and hath not gone after golde, ner hoped in money and treasures. Where is there such one? and we shal commend him, and call him blessed, for greate thinges doth he amonge his people. Who so is tryed, ⁊ founde perfecte in such thinges, shalbe commended and praised. Who might offende, ⁊ hath not offended? Who coude do euell, and hath not done it? Therefore shal his good be stablished, and the whole congregacion shal declare his allmesses. Yf thou sytt at a greate mans table, open not thy mouth wyde vpon it, and make not many wordes. Remembre, that an euell eye is a shrew.

What thinge created is worse then a wicked eye? therefore wepeth it before euery mā's face? Laye not thine hand vpon euery thinge that thine eye seyth, and stryue not with him in the dyshe.^d Ponder by thy self what thy neighbour wolde fayne haue, ⁊ be descrete in euery poynte. Eate the thinge that is set before the, manerly, as it becommeth a man: and eate not to moch,^e lest thou be abhorred. Leaue thou of first of all because of nourtoure, lest thou be he whom no man maye satisfie, which maye turne to thy decaye. Whā thou syttest amonge many men, reach not thine hāde out first of all. O how well contēt is a wyse man with a litle wyne? so ⁊ in slepe thou shalt not be seke therof, ner fele eny payne. A swete wholesome slepe shal soch one haue, and fele no inwarde grefe. He ryseth vp by tymes in ⁊ mornyng, and is well at ease in him self. But an vnsaciab eater slepeth vnquyetly, and hath ache and payne of the body. Yf thou felest that thou hast eaten to moch, aryse, go thy waye, cast it of thy stomach, and take thy rest.

My sonne, heare me, and despyse me not: and at the last thou shalt fynde as I haue told the. In all thy workes be diligent and quicke, so shal there no sicknes happen vnto the. Who so is liberrall in dealyng out his meate, many men shall blesse him and prayse him with their lippes: and the same is a sure token of his loue and faithfulness. But he ⁊ is vnfaithfull in meate, the whole cite shall complayne of him: and that is a sure experiece of his infidelite and wickednes. Be not thou a wine bebbler, for wyne hath destroyed many a man. The fyre proueth ⁊ hard yron, euen so doth wyne proue the hertes of the proude, whan they be droncken.

Wyne soberly droncken, quyeneth the life of mā.^f Yf thou drynkest it measurably, thou shalt be temperate. What life is it, ⁊ maye contynue without wyne? Wyne was made from the begynnynge to make men glad (and not for dronkennes.) Wyne measurably dronkē is a reioysinge of the soule and body. But yf it be dronken with excesse, it maketh bytternes and sorowe vnto the mynde. Dronkenes fyleth the mynde of the foolish with shame and ruyne, mynisheth the strēth, and maketh woundes. Rebuke not thy neighbour at ⁊ wyne, and despyse him not in his myrth. Geue him no despytefull wordes, and preasse not vpon him with contrary sayenges.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A YF thou be made a ruler, pride not thy self therin,^a but be thou as one of the people. ^aTake diligent care for them, and loke well therto: and when thou hast done all thy dewtye, syt the downe, that thou mayest be mery with them, and receaue a crowne of honoure. Talke wysely & honestly, for wysdome becommeth the right well. Hynder not musyck. Speake not, where there is no audyence: ^aand poure not forth wysdome out of tyme, at an importunyte. Like as the Carbuncle stone shyneth, that is set in golde, so doth a songe garnysh the wyne feast: and as ^a Smaragde that is set in golde, so is the swetnes of Musyck by ^a myrth of wyne.

B Thou yonge mā, speake that becommeth the, & that is profitable, and yet scarce whan thou art twyce axed. Comprehende moch with few wordes. In many thinges be as one that is ignoraunt, geue eare, and holde thy tonge withall. Yf thou be amonge men of hyer auctorite, desyre not to compare thy self vnto them: and whā an elder speaketh, make not thou many wordes therin. Before the thonder goeth lightenyng, and before nurtoure and shamefastnesse goeth loue and fauoure. Stōde vp by tymes, and be not the last: but get the home soone, & there take thy pastyme, & do what thou wilt: so ^a thou do no euell, and defye no mā. But for all thinges geue thanks, vnto him that hath made the, and replenished the with his goodes.

C Who so feareth the LORDE, wyl receaue his doctryne: and they that get them to him by tymes, shall fynde grace. He that seketh the lawe, shall be fylled withall: As for him ^a is but fayned, he wyl be offended therat. They that feare the LORDE, shal fynde the iudgment, & their righteousnes shalbe kyndled as a light. An vngodly man will not be reformed, but can helpe himself with the example of other in his purpose. A man of vnderstandinge despyseth no good counsell: but a wyld and proude body hath no feare. My sonne, do nothinge without advisement, so shal it not repēt the after ^a dede. Go not in the waye where thou mayest fall, ner where thou mayest stomble against the stone. Geue not thy self in to a laborious slypery waye, and beware of thine owne children. In all thy workes put thy trust in God from thy whole hert, for that is the kepinge of the cōmaundementes. Who so beleueth Gods worde, taketh hede to the cōmaundementes: & he that putteth his trust in ^a LORDE, shal wante nothinge.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THERE shall no euell happen vnto him A that feareth God: but whan he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall delyuer him. A wyse man hateth not ^a lawe, but an ypocryte is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstandinge geueth credence vnto the lawe of God, and ^a lawe is faithfull vnto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof: Be first wel instructe, thē maiest thou geue answere. The hert of ^a foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the axell tre. Like as a wyld horse that neyeth vnder euery one ^a sytteth vpon him, so is it with a scornerfull frende. Why doth one daie excell another, seynge all the dayes of the yere come of the Sonne? The wysdome of the LORDE hath so parted them a sunder, and so hath he ordered the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, & out of the earth of Adam.

In the multitude of scyence hath ^a LORDE B sundered them, and made their wayes of dyuerse fashions. Some of them hath he blessed, made moch of them, halowed them, & claymed them to himself. But some of thē hath he cursed, brought thē lowe, & put thē out of their estate. ^aLike as ^a claye is in the potters hande, & all the ordrynge therof at his pleasure: so are men also in the hande of him ^a made thē, so that he maye geue them as it liketh him best. Agaynst euell is good, and agaynst death is life: so is the vngodly agaynst soch as feare God. Beholde thus all the workes of the Hyst, & there are euer ^atwo agaynst two, and one set agaynst another. I am awaked vp last of all, as one that gathereth after in haruest. In the giftes of God and in his blessinge I am increased, & haue fylled my wyne presse, like a grape gatherer. ^aBeholde, how I haue not laboured onely for my self, but for all such as loue nurtoure and wysdome.

C Hearre me O ye greate men of the people, & harken with youre eares ye rulers of & congregacion. Geue not thy sonne & wyfe, thy brother & frende power ouer the, whyle thou lyuest: & geue not awaye thy substance and good to another, lest it repent the, & thou be fayne to begg therfore thy self. As longe as thou lyuest & hast breth, let no man chaunge the: For better it is thy children to praye the, then & thou shuldest be fayne to loke in their handes. In all thy workes be excellent, that thy honour be neuer stained. At the tyme whan thou shalt ende thy dayes, and fynish thy life, distribute thine inheritaunce. The fodder, the whyppe, and the burden belongeth vnto the Asse: Meate, correccion, and worke vnto the seruaunt.

D Yf thou set thy seruaunt to laboure, thou shalt fynde rest. But yf thou let him go ydel, he shal seke libertye. The yock and & whyppe bowe downe the neck, but tame thou thy euell seruaunt with bodes & correccion. Sende him to laboure, that he go not ydle: For Idlynesse bryngeth moch euell. Sett him to worke, for that belongeth vnto him and becōmeth him well. Yf he be not obedient, bynde his fete: but do not to moch vnto him in anye wyse, & without discrecion do nothinge. ^aYf thou haue a (faithfull) seruaūt, let him be vnto the as thine owne soule, for in bloude hast thou gotten him. Yf thou haue a seruaunt, holde him as thy self, for thou hast nede of him as of thy self. Yf thou intreatest him euell, and kepest him harde, and makest him to be proude, and to renne awaye from &, thou canst not tell, what waye thou shalt seke him.

The rrriiij. Chapter.

A VNWYSE people begyle them selues with vayne and disceatfull hope, and foolles trust in dreames. Who so regardeth dreames, is like him that wil take holde of a shadowe, and folowe after the wynde: Euen so is it with the appearinges of dreames. Before the face is the licknes of a face. Who can be clensed of & vnclane? Or what treuth can be spoken of a lyar? Soythsayenge, witchcraft, sorcery, and dreaminge is but vanyte: like as whan a womā trauayleth with chylde, and hath many fantasies in hir herte. Where as soch visions canue not of God, set not thine herte vpon them: For dreames haue disceaue many a mā, and they sayled, that put their truste therein.

The lawe shalbe fulfilled without lyes, & B wysdome is sufficient to a faithfull mouth. A wyse man & is well instructe, vnderstandeth moch: & he & hath good experience, can talke of wysdome. He & hath no experience, knoweth litle: & he & erreth, causeth moch wickednes. Whan I was yet in erreure, I lerned moch also: yee I was so lerned, that I coude not expresse it all, and came oft in parell of death therouer, tyll I was deliuered from it. Now I se, that they which feare God, haue the right sprete: for their hope stōdeth in him, that can helpe thē. Who so feareth the LORDE, stōdeth in awe of no man, and is not afrayed, for the LORDE is his hope and comforte.

Blessed is the soule of him & feareth the C LORDE: In whō putteth he his trust? who is his strēth? For the eyes of the LORDE haue respecte vnto them, that loue him. He is their mightie proteccion, & strōge grounde: A defence for the heate, a refuge for the hote noone daye, a sucoure for stomblynge, & an helpe for fallynge. He setteth vp the soule, and lighteneth & eyes: He geueth health life, and blessinge. He that geueth an offeringe of vnrighteous good, his offeringe is refused: and the scornfull dealinges of the vnrighteous please not God. ^aGod hath no delyte in the offeringes of & vngodly, nether maye synne be reconcyled in the multitude of oblacions. Who so bryngeth an offeringe out of & goodes of & poore, doth euē as one & kylleth & sonne before & fathers eyes.

The bred of the nedefull is the life of the D poore: he & defraudeth him therof, is a man, of bloude. Who so robbeth his neghboure of his luyinge, doth as greate synne as though he slew him to death. ^aHe that defraudeth & laborer of his hyre, is a bloude shedder. Whā one buyldeth, and another breaketh downe, what profit haue they then but labour? Whan one prayeth, & another curseth, whose voyce wyl the LORDE heare? ^aHe that washeth himself because of a deed body, & then toucheth the deed agayne, what doth his waszshinge? ^aSo is it with a man that fasteth for his synnes, and doth them agayne: who wil heare his prayer? Or what doth his fastyng helpe him?

The xxv. Chapter.

WHO so kepeth the lawe, bryngeth of ferynges ynough. ^aHe that holdeth fast the commaundement, offreth the right healthoffrynge. He ^bis thankfull & recompenseth, offreth fyne flour. ^cWho so is mercifull & geueth allmes, ^dis the right thank offrynge. God hath pleasure, whā one departeth frō synne: & to forsake vnrighteousnes recoileth vs with him. Thou shalt not appeare empty before ^eLORDE, for all soch is done because of ^fcomādemēt. The offeringe of ^grighteous maketh ^haulter fatt, & a swete smell is it before ⁱHyest. ^jThe offerynge of the righteous is acceptable vnto God, and shal neuer be forgottē. Geue God his honour with a chearfull eye, & kepe not backe the firstlinges of thy handes. In all thy giftes shew a mery countenance, & halowe thy tithes vnto God with gladnes. ^kGeue vnto God, acordinge as he hath enriched & prospered the: & loke what thine hande is able, ^lgeue with a chearfull eye: for the LORDE recompenseth, & geueth ^mseuē tymes as moch againe.

B Geue no vnrighteous giftes, for soch wil not he receaue. Beware of wrongeous offeringes, for ⁿLORDE is ^oa righteous iudge, & regardeth no mans personne: He accepteth not the personne of the poore, but he heareth ^pprayer of ^qoppressed. ^rHe despyeth not ^sdesyre of ^tfatherles, ner ^uwyddow, whan she poureth out hir prayer before him. Doth not God se ^vteares, ^wrenne downe ^xchekes of the wyddow? Or heareth he not the complaynte, ouer soch as make her to wepe? Who so serueth God after his pleasure, shalbe accepted, & his prayer reacheth vnto the cloudes. ^yThe prayer of him ^zhumbleth himself, goeth thorow ^{aa}cloudes, tyll she come nye. She wyll not be comforted, ner go hir waye, tyll ^{ab}hyest God haue respecte vnto her, geue true sentēce, & perfourme ^{ac}judgmēt. And ^{ad}LORDE wil not be slack in cōmyng, ner tary longe: tyll he haue smyttē in sonder ^{ae}backes of ^{af}vnmercyfull, & auenged himself of ^{ag}Heithen: tyll he haue takē awaye ^{ah}multitude of ^{ai}cruell, & brokē the cepter of the vnrighteous: tyll he geue euery man after his workes, & rewarde them as they haue deserved: tyll he haue deliuered his people, mayntened their cause, and reioysed them in his mercy. O how fayre a thinge is mercy, in the tyme of anguysh & trouble? It is like a cloude of rayne, ^{aj}cometh in ^{ak}tyme of a drouth.

The xxvi. Chapter.

Lift vp thine hande ouer the outlādish Heithen, ^{aq}they maye lerne to knowe thy might & power. Like as thou art halowed in vs before them, so brynge to passe, ^{ar}they mayest be magnified also in them before vs: ^{as}they maye knowe the, like as we knowe the. For there is none other God, but onely thou O LORDE. Renue the tokens, & chaunge the wonderous workes. Shewe thine hāde and thy right arme gloriously. Rayse thy indignacion, & poure out thy wrath. thy prophetes maye be founde faithfull. O LORDE heare the prayer of thy seruantes, accordinge to ⁊ blessinge of Aaron ouer thy people: "that all they which dwell vpon earth, maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE the eternall God, which is from euerlastinge.

¶ The bely deuoureth all meates, yet is one meate better then another. Like as the tonge taisteth venyson,^a so doth an hert of vnderstandinge marck false wordes. A frowarde hert geueth heuynes, but a man of experience lifeth him vp agayne. The woman receaueth euery man, yet is one daughter better then another. A fayre wife reioyseth hir huszbande, and a man loueth nothinge better. Yf she be lounge ⁊ vertuous withall, then is not hir huszbande like other men. He that hath gotten a vertuous woman, hath a goodly possession: she is vnto him an helpe and piler wher vpon he resteth. Where no hedge is, there the goodes are spoyled: and where no houswife is, there ⁊ frēdles mourneth. The xxxvij. Chapter.

¶ EUERY frende sayeth: I wil be frendly vnto him also. But there is some frende, which is onely a frende in name. Remayneth there not heuynes vnto death, whan a companion and frende is turned to an enemye? O most wicked presumpcion: Frō whence art thou spronge vp, to couer the earth with falsede ⁊ disceate? There is some companion, which in prosperite reioyseth with his frēde: but in the tyme of trouble, he taketh parte agaynst him. There is some cōpanyon, that mourneth with his frende for the bely sake: but whan trouble commeth, he taketh holde of the shyld. Forget not thy frende in thy mynde, ⁊ thynke vpon him in thy riches. Euery counselor bryngeth forth his counsell: Neuertheles there is some, ⁊ counceleth but for his owne profit. Bewarre of ⁊ counselor, ⁊ be adysed afore wherto thou wilt vse him, for he wil geue coucell for him self. Lest he cast the loit vpon the, ⁊ saye vnto the: Thy waye and purpose is good, and afterwarde he stande agaynst the, and loke what shal become of the.

Axe no coucell at him, ⁊ suspeketh ⁊ for an enemye, ⁊ hyde thy counsell from soch as hate ⁊. Axe no counsell at a woman, cōcernynge ⁊ thinges ⁊ she lōgeth for: ner at a fearful ⁊ fayntharted body, in matters of warre: or at a marchant, how deare he wil cheape thy wares towarde his: or at a byer, of sellynge: Or at an enuyous man, of thankesgeuyng: Or at the vnmmercifull, of lounge kindnes: Or at ⁊ slouthfull, of workinge: Or at an hyrelyng which hath no house, of profit or wealth. (An ydle body wolde not gladly heare speake of moch labour.) Take no soch folkes to coucell, but be diligēt to seke coucell at a vertuous man, ⁊ feareth God, soch one as thou knowest to be a keeper of ⁊ cōmaundemētes, which hath a minde after thine owne minde, ⁊ is sory for ⁊ whā thou stōblest.

¶ And holde thy counsell fast in thine hert: for there is no man more faithful to kepe it, then thou thy self. For a mā's mynde is somtyme more disposed to tell out, then seuē watchmen that sytt aboue in an hye place lōkyng aboute them. And aboue all this praye the Hyst, that he wil lede thy waye in faithfulness ⁊ trueth. Before all thy workes axe counsell first: and or euer thou doest eny thinge, be well adysed. There be foure thinges that declare a chaunged hert, wherout there springeth euell ⁊ good, death ⁊ life, ⁊ a masterfull tonge that bableth moch. Some man is apte and well instructe in many thinges, and yet very vnprofitable vnto himself. Some man there is, that can geue wyse and prudent counsell, and yet is he hated, ⁊ contynueh a begger: for that grace is not geuē him of God, to be accepted. Another is robbed of all wiszdome, yet is he wise vnto himself, and the frute of vnderstōdinge is faithfull in his mouth.

¶ A wyse man maketh his people wyse, ⁊ ⁊ frutes of his wiszdome fayle not. A wyse mā shal be plēteously blessed of God: ⁊ all they that se him, shal speake good of him. The life of man stondesth in ⁊ nōbre of the dayes, but the dayes of Israel are innumerable. A wyse man shal opteyne faithfulness ⁊ credence amonge his people, ⁊ his name shalbe perpetuall. My sonne, proue thy soule in thy life: ⁊ yf thou se eny euell thinge, geue it not vnto her. For all thinges are not profitable for all men, nether hath euery soule pleasure in euery thinge. Be not greedy in euery eatinge, and be not to haistye vpon all meates. For ^aexcesse of meates bryngeth siknes, and glotony commeth at the last to an vnmeasurable heate. Thorow glotony haue many one perished: but he that dyeteth him self temperatly, prolongeth his life.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A HONOUR the Phisician: honour him because of necessite. God hath created him (for of the Hiest commeth medecyne) and he shal receaue giftes of the kynge. The wysdome of the phisician bryngeth him to greate worships, and in the sight of the greате men of this worlde, he shalbe honorably taken. The LORDE hath created medecyne of the earth, and he that is wyse, wyl not abhorre it. ^bWas not y bytter water made swete with a tre? that men might lerne to knowe the vertue therof. The LORDE hath geuen men wysdome and vnderstandinge, y he might be honoured in his woderous workes. With soch doth he heale men, and taketh awaye their paynes: Of soch doth the Apotecary make a confection, yet can no man perfourme all his workes. For of y LORDE commeth prosperous wealth ouer all y earth.

B My sonne, despyse not this in thy sicknes: but praye vnto the LORDE, and he shal make the whole. Leauē of from synne, and ordre thy handes a right: clesē thine hert from all wickednes. Geue a swete sauoured offrynge, and y fyne floure for a token of remembraunce: make the offrynge fatt, as one that geueth the first frutes, and geue rowme to the Phisician. For y LORDE hath created him: let him not go from the, for thou hast nede of him. The houre maye come, y the sekte maye be helped thorow them, when they praye vnto y LORDE, y he maie recouer, and get health to lyue longer. He that synneth before his maker, shall fall in to the handes of the Phisician.

C My sonne, brynge forth thy teares ouer the deed: and ^cbegynne to mourne, as yf thou haddest suffred greate harme thy self: and the couer his body after a conuenient maner, and despyse not his buryall. Enforce thy self to wepe, y prouoke thy self to mourne, and make lamentacion expediently, and y a daye or two, lest thou be euell spoken of: and then cōforte thy self because of the heuynes. For of heuynes cometh death, the heuynes of y hert breaketh strength. Heuynes and pouerte greueth the hert in tentacion and offence. Take no heuynes to hert, dryue it awaye, and remembre the last thinges. Forget it not, for there is no turnynge agayne. Thou shalt do him no good, but hurte thy self. Remembre his iudgmēt, thine also shalbe likewise: vnto me yesterdaye, vnto the to daye. Let the remembraunce of the deed cease in his rest, and cōforte thy self agayne ouer him, seynge his sprete is departed from him.

The wysdome of the scribe is at cōuenient tyme of rest: and he y ceaseth from exerceyse and labour, shalbe wyse. He that holdeth y plough, and hath pleasure in proddynge and dryuynge y oxen, and goeth aboute with soch workes, he can speake of oxen. He setteth his hert to make forowes, and is diligent to geue y kyne fodder. So is euery carpenter also and work master, that laboureth still night and daye: he carueth, graueth and cutteth out, and his desyre is in sondrye connynges thinges, and his hert ymagineth, how he maye conyngly cast an ymage, his diligence also and watchinge perfourmeth the worke. The yronsmith in like maner bydeth by his stythie, and doth his diligence to labour the yron. The vapoure of the fyre brenneth his flesh, and he must fight with the heate of the fornace. The noyse of the Hammer soundeth euer in his eares, and his eyes loke still vpon the thinge y he maketh. He hath set his minde there vpon, that he wyl make out his worke, and therefore he watcheth, how he maie set it out, and brynge it to an ende.

E So doth the potter syt by his worke, he turneth y whele aboute with his fete, he is diligent and carefull in all his doynge, and his labour and worke is without nombre. He fashioneth the claye with his arme, and with his fete he tēpereth it. His hert ymagineth how he maye make it pleasaunt, and his diligence is to clense the ouen. All these hope in their hādes, and euery one thinketh to be connyng in his worke. Without these maye not the cities be manteyned, inhabited ner occupied: yet come they not hie in the congregacion: they vnderstande not the coue-

 stande the lawe of God, doth diligently seke out þ̄ wysdome of them of the olde tyme, ⁊ exercyseth him self in the prophetes.
 He kepeth þ̄ sayenges of famous men, and preaseth to the vnderstandinge of darck mysterye of secrete sayēges, and exercyseth him self therin cōtynually. He doth seruyce

 He purposeth in his hert, to resorte early maie then poure out wyse sentences, ⁊ geue thanks vnto the LORDE in his prayer. He shal orde his deuyce, and lede his knowlege aright, ⁊ geue him vnderstandinge of secrete thinges. He shal shew forth the sciēce of his lerninge, ⁊ reioyce in the couenaunt of the lawe of the LORDE. The whole congregacion shal cōmende his wysdome, ⁊ it shal neuer be put out. The remembraunce of him shal neuer be forgotten, ⁊ his name shal contynue from one generacion to another.

 His wysdome shalbe spoken of, ⁊ the whole congregacion shall openly declare his prayse.
 Why he liueth, he hath a greater name thē a thousande besyde: ⁊ after his death, the same name remaineth vnto him. Yet wyll I speake of mo men of vnderstandinge, for I am full as the Moone.

C Herkē vnto me (ye holy vertuous childrē) brynge forth frute, as the rose that is planted by the brokes of the felde, and geue ye a swete smell as Libanus. Flourish as the rose garden, synge a songe of prayse. O geue thākes vnto God ouer all his workes. Geue glory and honoure vnto the LORDE, shew his prayse with youre lippes. Yee euen with the songe of youre lippes, with harpes ⁊ playenge, and in geuinge thanks vnto him, saye after this maner: 'All þ̄ workes of the LORDE are excedeinge good, and all his commaundementes are mete and conuenient in due season.

A mā nede not to saie: what is þ̄? what is that? for at tyme 'conuenient they shal all be sought. At his cōmaundement þ̄ water was as a wall, ⁊ at the worde of his mouth þ̄ waters stode still. In his commaundement is euery thinge acceptable and reconcyled, and his health can not be minished. The workes of all flesh are before him, ⁊ there is nothinge hydd from his eyes. He seith from euerlast-inge to euerlastinge, and there is nothinge to wonderfull or hye vnto him. A man nede not to saye then, what is this, or that? For he hath made all thinges to do good vnto man. His blessinge shall renne ouer as the streame, and moysture the earth like a floude of water. Like as he maketh the water for drouth, so shall his wrath fall vpon the Heithen.

'His wayes are playne and right vnto þ̄ iust, but the vngodly stombe at them. For the good are good thinges created from the begynnynge, and euell thinges for the vngodly.
 All thinges necessary for the life of man are created from the begynnynge: 'water, fyre, yron and salt, meel, wheate and hony mylke and wyne, oyle and clothinge. All these thinges are created for the best to the faithfull:
 But to the vngodly shal all these thinges be turned to hurte and harme. There be spretes that are created for vengeaūce, and in their rigorousnes haue ⁊ they fastened their tormentes. In the tyme of the ende they shal poure out their strēgth, and pacifie þ̄ 'wrath of him that made them. Fyre, hayle, honger and death: all these thinges are created for vengeaunce.

The teth of wyld noysome beestes, the scorpions, serpentes, and the swerde are created also for vengeaunce, to the destruction of the vngodly. They shall be glad to do his commaundementes: and whan nede is, they shalbe ready vpon earth: and whan their houre is come, they shal not ouerpasse the commaundement of the LORDE.

Therefore haue I taken a good corage vnto me from the begynnyng, and thought to put these thinges in wrytinge, and to leaue the behynde me. "All þy workes of the LORDE are good, and he geueth euery one in due season, and whan nede is, So that a man nede not to saye: this is worse then that. For in due season they are all pleasaunt and good: And therefore prayse the LORDE with whole hert and mouth, & geue thanks vnto his name.

The xl. Chapter.

A GREATE trauaile is created for all me, and an heuy yock vpon all mens children, from the daye that they go out of their mothers wombe, tyll they be buried in (the earth) the mother of all thinges: namely, their thoughtes and ymaginacions, feare of the hert, counsell, meditations, longinge and desyre, the daye of death: from the hyst that sytteth vpon the glorious seate, vnto the lowest and most symple vpon the earth: from him that is gorgeously arayed, and weereth a crowne, vntyll him that is but homely and symple clothed. There is nothinge but wrath, zeale, fearfulness, vnquietnes, and feare of death, rigorous anger and stryfe. And in the night whan one shulde rest and slepe vpon his bedd, the slepe chaungeth his vnderstandinge and knowlege. A lile as noþinge is his rest, in þy slepe as well as in the daye of laboure.

B He feareth and is disquyted in the vision of his hert, as one that renneth out of a batayll: and in the tyme of health he awaketh, and marueleth that the feare was nothinge. Soch thinges happen vnto all flesh, both man and best: so seuenfolde to the vngodly. Morouer death, bloudsheddinge, strife & swerde, oppression, honger, destruccion and ^bpunishment: these thinges are all created agaynst the vngodly, and for their sakes came the floude also. All that is of the earth, shal turne to earth agayne: and all waters ebb agayne in to the see. All brybes and vnrighteousnes shalbe put awaye, but faithfulness and trueth shal endure for euer. The substaunce and goodes of þy vngodly shalbe dried vp and syncke awaye as a water floude, and they shal make a sounde like a greate thunder in the rayne.

C Like as the righteous reioyseth whan he openeth his hande, so shall the trasgressours be faynte, whan their goodes vanyshe and consume awaye. "The children of the vngodly shal not optayne many braunches: and þy vnclane rotes vpō the hye rockes shalbe roted out before the gras by the water syde & vpon the ryuer bankes.

Frendlynnes and liberalite in the increase and blessinge of God, is like a paradise & garden of pleasure: soch mercy also & kindnes endureth for euer. "To labour & to be content with that a man hath, is a swete pleasaunt life: & that is to fynde a treasure aboue all treasures. To beget children and to repayre the cite, maketh a perpetuall name: but an honest woman is more worth the they both. Wyne and mynstralsye reioyse the hert, but the loue of wysdome is aboue them both.

D Pypinge and harpinge make a swete noyse, but a frendly tonge goeth beyonde them both. Thine eye desyreth fauoure and bewtie but a grene sede tyme rather the they both. A frende and companyon come together at oportunitie, but aboue them both is a wife that agreeth with hir huszbande. One brother helpeth another in the tyme of trouble, but allmes shal deliuer more then they both. Golde and syluer fasten the fete, but a good counsell is more pleasaunt then they both. Temporall substaunce and strength lift vp the mynde: but the feare of the LORDE more then they both. The feare of the LORDE wanteth nothinge, and nedeth no helpe. The feare of þy LORDE is as a pleasaunt gardē of blessinge, and nothinge so bewtyfull as it is. My sonne, lede not a beggers life, for better it were to dye the to begg. Who so loketh to another mans table, taketh no thought for his owne lyuynge how to vpholde his life, for he fedeth himself with other mens meate. But a wyse and well nurtoured man wyll bewarre therof. Begynge is swete in the mouth of the vnshamefast, but in his bely there burneth a fyre.

The xli. Chapter.

A O DEATH, how bytter is the remembrance of the, to a man that seketh rest and comforte in his substance and riches, vnto the man that hath nothinge to vexen him, and that hath prosperite in all thinges, yee vnto him that yet is able to receaue meate? O death, how acceptable and good is thy iudgment vnto the nedefull, and vnto him whose strength fayleth, & that is now in his last age, and that in all thinges is full of care and fearfulness; vnto him also that is in dispayre, and hath no hope ner pacience? Be not thou afraied of death: remembre them [¶] haue bene before the: and [¶] come after [¶]: this is the iudgmēt of [¶] LORDE ouer all flesh. ^a And why woldest thou be agaist this pleasure of [¶] Hiest? Whether it be ten, an hundred, or a thousande yeares: death axeth not how longe one haue lyued.

B The children of the vngodly are abominable children, and so are they that kepe company with the vngodly. The inheritaunce of vngodly children shall come to naught, ^b and their posterite shal haue perpetual shame and confucion. The children complayne of an vngodly father: and why? for his sake they are rebuked and despyed. Wo be vnto you (O ye vngodly) which haue forsakē the lawe of [¶] hiest God: Yf ye be borne, ye shal be borne to cursynge: yf ye dye, [¶] curse shal be youre porcion.

^c All that is of [¶] earth, shal turne to earth agayne: so go the vngodly also out of [¶] curse in to destruccion. The sorow of men is in their body: but [¶] name of the vngodly shal be put out, for it is nothinge worth. Laboure to get the a good name, for that ^d shall continue surer by the, then a thousande greate treasures of golde. A good life hath a nōbre of dayes, but a good name endureth euer.

C My children, kepe wysdome in peace: for wysdome that is hyd and a treasure that is not sene, what profit is in the both? ^e A man that hydeth his foolishnes, is better then a man that hydeth his wysdome. Therefore be ye turned at my wordes: for it is not good, in all thinges and allwaie to be ashamed. True faith must proue and measure it.

Be ashamed of whordome before father and mother: Be ashamed of lesynge before the prynce and men of auctorite: Of synne, before the iudge and ruler: Of offence, before the congregacion and people: Of vnrighteousnes, before a companion and frēde: Of theft, before [¶] neighbours. As for the trueth of God and his couenaunt, ^f be not ashamed therof.

Be ashamed to lye with thyne elbowes vpon the bred: Be ashamed to loke vpō harlottes: Be ashamed to turne away thy face from thy frende: Be ashamed to take [¶] not to geue: Be ashamed also to loke vpon another mans wyfe, and to make many tryflinge wordes with hir mayden, or to stonde by hir bedsyde. Be ashamed to vprade thy frēde: and whan thou geuest eny thinge, cast him not in the teth withall.

The xliij. Chapter.

R HEARSE not a thinge twyse, and disclose not the wordes, that thou hast herde in secrete. Be shamefast & well mannered in dede, so shall euery man fauoure the. Of these thinges be not thou ashamed, and accepte no personne to offende. Namely, of these thinges be not ashamed: Of the lawe of God, of the couenaunt, of iudgmēt: to brynge the vngodly from his vngodlines vnto righteousnes, and to make him a good man: to deale faithfully with neghboure & companion: to distribute the heretage vnto [¶] frendes: to be diligent to kepe true measure and weight: to be content, whether thou gettest moch or litle: to deale truly with temporall goodes in byenge and sellynge: to brynge vp children with diligence: to correcke an euell seruauant: to kepe that thine is frō an euell wife: to set a lock where many handes are: what thou delyuerest and geuest out to be kepte, to tell it, and to weye it: to wryte vp all the out geuynge and receauynge: to enforme [¶] vnlearned and vnwyse: Of the aged, that are iudged of the yonge. Yf thou be diligēt in these thinges, truly thou shalt be lerned and wyse and accepted of all men.

The daughter maketh [¶] father to watch secretly: and the carefulnes that he hath for her, taketh away his slepe: yee in the youth, lest she shulde ouergrowe him: And whan she hath an huszbande, lest she shulde be hated: lest she shulde be defyled or rayshed in hir virginyte, or gotten with childe in hir fathers house: Or (whan she commeth to the man) lest she behaue herself not right, or contynue vn frutefull. Yf thy daughter be wanton,^a kepe her strately, lest she cause thine enemies laugh the to scorne, & the whole cite to geue f an euell reporte, and so thou be fayne to heare thy shame of euery man, and be confounded before all f people. ^bBeholde not euery bodies bewtye, & haue not moch dwellynge amonge wemen. For like as the worne and moth commeth out of clothinge, ^cso doth wickednes come of wemen.

C It is better to be with an euell man, then with a frendly wife f putteth one to shame and rebuke. I wyl remembre the workes of the LORDE, and declare the thinge f I haue sene. In f wordes of f LORDE are his workes. The Sone ouerloketh all thiges with his shine, & all his workes are full of f clearnes therof. Hath not the LORDE brought to passe, that his sayntes shulde tell out all his wōderous workes, which the all-mightie LORDE hath stablyshed? All thinges endure in his glory. He seketh out the grounde of the depe and the hert, and he knoweth all their ymaginacion & wysdome. D For f LORDE knoweth all scyence, and he loketh in to f token of the time. He declareth the thinges f are past and for to come, & discloseth thinges that are secrete. ^dNo thought maye escape him, nether maye eny worde be hyd from him. He hath garnyshed the hye excellent workes of his wysdome, and he is frō euerlastinge to euerlastinge. Vnto him maye nothinge be added nether can he be mynished, he hath no nede also of eny counsell. O how amiable are all his workes, & as a sparke to loke vpon? They lyue all, and endure for euer: and whan so euer nede is, they are all obedient vnto him. They are all dubble, one agaynst another: he hath made nothinge^e that hath faute or blemyshe. He hath stablyshed the goodes of euerychone: and who maye be satisfied with his glory, whan he seith it?

The xliij. Chapter.

A THE glory of the heyth, is the fayre and cleare firmament,^f the bewtye of the heauen in his glorious clearnes. The sonne whan it appeareth, declareth the daye in f goinge out of it, a maruelous worke of the Hyest. At noone it burneth f earth, and who maye abyde for the heate therof? Who so kepeth an ouen whan it is hote, thre tymes more doth the Sonne burne vpon f mountaynes, whan it bretheth out the fyrie beames and shyneth: with the brightnes of it, it blyndeth the eyes. Greate is the LORDE that made it, and in his commaundement he causeth it to renne haistely.

^gThe Moone also is in all, and at conuenient season it sheweth the tymes, and is a token of the tyme. ^hThe token of the solempne feast is taken of the Moone, a light that mynsheth and increaseth againe. The Moneth is called after the Moone, it groweth wondrously in hir chaunginge.

The armye of heauen also is in the Heith, B in the firmament of heauen it geueth a cleare and glorious shyne. This is the clearnes of the starres, the bewtifull apparell of heauen, the apparell that the LORDE lighteneth in the heyth. In his holy worke they continue in their ordre, and not one of them fayleth in his watch. ⁱLoke vpon f rayne bowe, and prayse him that made it: very bewtifull is it in his shyne. He compaseth the heauen aboute with his clearnes and glory, the handes of the Hyest haue bēded it. Thorow his commaundement he maketh the snowe to fall, and the thonder of his iudgment to smyte hastely. Thorow his commaundement the treasures are opened, and the cloudes fle as the foules. In his power hath he strengthened the cloudes, and brokē the hayle stones.

The mountaynes melt at f sight of him, the wynde bloweth accordinge to his wyll. The sounde of his thonder beateth f earth, and so doth the storme of the north: the whirle wynde also lighteth downe as a feathered foule, casteth out and spredeth the snowe abroad: and as the greshoppers that destroye all, so falleth it downe. The eie marueleth at f bewtye of the whytenesse therof, and the hert is afraied at the raine of it. He poureth out the frost vpon earth, like salt, and whan it is frozen, it is as sharpe as the prycke of a thistle.

Whan the colde northwynde bloweth, harde C Christall commeth of the water. He lighteth downe vpon all the gatheringes together of water, and putteth on \hat{y} waters as a brest plate. He deuoureth the mountaynes, and burneth the wyldernesses: and loke what is grene, he putteth it out like fyre. The medycine of all these is, whan a cloude commeth hastily: and whan a dew commeth vpon the heate, it shalbe refreszhed agayne.

(In his worde he styllth the wynde,) In his counsell he setteth the depe, and (the LORDE) Iesus planted it. They that sayle ouer the see, tell of his pearlys and harmes: and whan we heare it with oure eares, we maruell therat. For there be straunge wonderous workes, dyuerse maner of nyce beestes and whall fishes. Thorow him are all thinges set in good ordre and performed, τ in his worde all thinges endure.

D I speake moch, but I can not sufficiently attayne vnto it, for he himself onely is the perfection of all wordes. We shulde prayse the LORDE after all oure power, for he is greate in all his workes. "The LORDE is to be feared yee very greate is he, and maruelous is his power. Prayse the LORDE, and magnifie him as moch as ye maye, yet doth he farre farre excede all prayse. "O magnifie him with all youre power, and laboure earnestly, yet are ye in no wyse able sufficiently to prayse him. "Who hath sene him, that he might tell vs? Who can magnifie him so greatly as he is? For there are hyd yet greater thinges thē these be: as for vs, we haue sene but few of his workes. For the LORDE hath made all thinges, and geuen wyszdome to such as feare God.

The xliiiij. Chapter.

A commendacion of the olde vertuous fathers.

A LET vs commend the noble famous men, and the generacion of oure forefathers and fathers. Many more glorious actes hath the LORDE done, and shewed his greate power euer sens \hat{y} begynnynge. The noble famous men reigned in their kyngdomes, and bare excellent rule. In their wyszdome and vnderstandinge, they folowed the counsell shewed in the propheties.^d They led the folke thorow the counsell and wyszdome of the scribes of the people. Wyse sentences are founde in their instruccion.

They sought the swetenes and melody of Musick, and brought forth the pleasaunt songes in scripture. They were riche also, τ coude comforte and pacifie those that dwelt with them. All these were very noble and honorable men in their generacions, and were well reported of in their tymes. These haue left a name behynde them, so that their prayse shal allwaye be spokē of. Afterwarde there were some, whose remembraunce is gone.^e They came to naught and perished, as though they had neuer bene: and became as though they had neuer bene borne, yee τ their children also with them.

Neuertheles these are louynge men, whose righteounes shal neuer be forgotten, but contynue by their posterite. Their children are an holy good heretage: Their sede endured fast in \hat{y} couenaunt. For their sakes shal their childrē τ sede contynue for euer, τ their prayse shal neuer be put downe. Their bodies are buried in peace, but their name lyueth for euermore. The people can speake of their wyszdome, τ the congregacion can talke of their prayse. "Enoch walked right τ acceptably before the LORDE: therfore was he traslated for an example of amendemēt to \hat{y} generacions. "Noe was a stedfast τ righteous man: τ in the tyme of wrath he became a recōcylinge. Therfore was he left a remnant vnto the earth, whan the floude came. "An euerlastinge couenaunt was made with him, that all flesh shulde perishe nomore with \hat{y} water.

Abraham was a greate father of many people,^f in glory was there none like vnto him. He kepte the lawe of the Hiest, τ came in to a couenaunt with him. He set the couenaunt in his flesh,^g and whan he was tempted, he was founde faithfull. Therfore swore God vnto him with an ooth, that he wolde blesse all people in his sede, that he wolde multiplie and increase him as the dust of the earth, and to exalte his sede as the starres: yee and that his sede shulde haue \hat{y} possession and inheretance of the londe from see to see, and from the ryuer vnto \hat{y} borders of the londe.
